PREFACE

THE first edition of this work, which appeared in parts under the title of Faclair Gàidhlig le dealbhan, and the nom-de-plume of "Ewen MacDonald" being now out of print, the necessity has arisen for a new edition. The one I now present to the public will, I trust, be found of equal service both to beginners and advanced students of the language. The first edition of the work has been carefully revised and no expense or labour spared to make this the most reliable and complete Gaelic Dictionary obtainable.

The work was originally undertaken solely for my own private use, but after continual urging by other Gaelic students who had seen it, and proved its utility by experience, I at last consented to print it and so make the result of my labours accessible to all.

The vocabulary is based on that of MacLeod & Dewar, so much appreciated by Gaelic students, and where the orthography of that work differs from MacBain's Gaelic Dictionary that of the latter has been generally adopted here. All the words not given by MacLeod & Dewar, but appearing in any of the other Gaelic Dictionaries are now included besides some thousands of words gathered from Common Speech and the whole range of Modern Scottish Gaelic Literature, including the Gaelic names of Plants, Diseases and Birds, Technical Terms, &c., compiled from lists given in pamphlets and periodicals from time to time. All the examples of idiomatic phrases and proverbs given by MacAlpine have been retained, as well as Armstrong's, where not practically the same, and many from Nicolson's Gaelic Proverbs have been added, with large numbers from various other sources, Local words and provincialisms from Common speech, &c., many never printed before.

My thanks are chiefly due to his Most Gracious Majesty the late King Edward, for graciously awarding me a Civil List Pension when only about one half of the Dictionary had been issued to the public, and his Majesty's lamentable death is one of the dark shadows that mars my pleasure at the completion of my life-work, by preventing the possibility of my offering a copy for his acceptance. The great expense entailed by the publication of a book of this magnitude singlehanded, is a constant and heavy drain on the income of anyone of small means, and were it not for the receipt of this pension when it was awarded, the continuation of the publication beyond page 600 would have been, at least for many years, an absolute impossibility. Before proceeding any farther, I should have had to execute enough remunerative work to enable me to purchase the necessary materials to continue the Dictionary as well as to live upon, an exceedingly hard task after the struggles I had already gone through, and one which would have no doubt eventually ended in the abandonment of the publication in an unfinished state. Owing to unfortunate investments I had already had to earn all the money to purchase the necessary materials to produce this book as well as much of my living for some years by doing any printing I could get; but the strain on brain and eyesight entailed by thus always working at the highest pressure and for exceptionally long hours, so that the Dictionary might be completed as quickly as possible, could not have been continued much longer.

I have much pleasure in acknowledging the great help given by my correspondents in all parts of the world, both by sending numbers of words that were new to me and by obtaining many subscribers to the work. I am also indebted to my wife for revising proofs, assisting in folding sheets, and preparing parts for post, as well as for advising many translations. The success of the work is in no small measure due to her assistance in household matters, and by keeping down domestic expenses making money available for its production that would have otherwise been spent in an unproductive way. The following gentlemen have kindly assisted by following the work during its progress through the press, and it is largely due to their suggestions and additions that the compilation of such a full and accurate vocabulary of Scottish Gaelic has been possible.

Malcolm Macfarlane, Elderslie, Johnstone.

Rev. Charles M. Robertson, Craighouse, Jura.

Henry Whyte, "Fionn," Glasgow.

Rev. J. MacRury, Snizort, Skye.

Wm. Cameron, Poolewe, Ross-shire.

Duncan MacIsaac, Oban.

A. Henderson, Kilmory, Kilchoan.

J. G. MacKay, London.

Donald MacKenzie, late I. R., Killimster, Wick.

Malcolm MacDonald, Stornoway.

Rev. D. Campbell, M.A. PH.D., Bunachton, Dores.

Rev. Malcolm MacLeod, M.A. Broadford, Skye.

Donald Murray, Aberdeen.

David Urquhart, M.A., Kyle, Lochalsh.

Rev. D. M. Cameron, Ledaig, Argyll.

Rev. D. Munro, Ferintosh, Ross-shire.

Rev. C. M. Robertson and Mr. Henry Whyte have also assisted me considerably with Proper Names and Technical Terms.

I am particularly indebted to Dr. W. J. Watson for kindly revising and adding to the list of Gaelic Proper Names which I have been collecting for a period of thirty years. This is the first general list of the kind published for all Scotland. I must not omit my great obligation to the Press both at home and abroad, for the detailed reviews they have given of the parts as they appeared, and for their hearty appreciation of my labours.

The Highland Society of London kindly contributed £25 towards the cost of publication.

No one who has always spoken a language like Gaelic from the cradle can ever realize the extraordinary difficulties presented to a stranger who wishes to acquire it. First, the majority of Gaelic speakers only a very few years ago could neither read nor write it, so when one heard an unfamiliar word or phrase and the first instinct was of course to write it down lest it should be forgotten, the question was how to spell it—of course the speaker could not tell! I was baulked in this way times without number, and my progress with the language immensely retarded in consequence. Next, the great difficulty of inducing a Gael to engage in a Gaelic conversation if he thinks he can make himself understood at all by means of indifferent English, or even if there is anyone present who cannot understand Gaelic, makes the acquisition of a knowledge of colloquial Gaelic much more difficult than is the case with other modern tongues, for it is only by posing as a Highlander and one who knows Gaelic that one can ever hope to hear it spoken habitually and without restraint. These are real difficulties, but they may be overcome by scheming and perseverance as I have proved.

This Dictionary is of especial value to the beginner. Many who did not learn the language in infancy, but acquired it in later life through the medium of books, have notified me of the difficulties of grammar and idiom they met with. Such difficulties are likely to puzzle other novices, and have therefore been explained under their appropriate headings. Grammatical difficulties have been elucidated by good Gaelic scholars, and no labour has been spared to make the work as complete and reliable as possible. Some have found fault with my explanations here and there as being too full but I have always purposely inclined to being too explicit rather than too vague, because while one reader may be far beyond any assistance a certain explanation gives, the next may find in it an elucidation of a difficulty that he has been trying to get explained for months. This has been brought home vividly to me by some of my proof-readers making such remarks as, "unnecessary," "self-evident," &c. beside explanations I have given of difficulties that had puzzled me considerably when a beginner, and the full understanding of which I had imperceptibly acquired as I attained increased fluency in speaking the language.

Some scholars object to some of the words given in other Dictionaries as being Irish and not Scottish Gaelic, but many of these so-called Irish words are in daily use in Cantyre and appear in the Scottish Gaelic Bible, and the close similarity the Gaelic speech of the West of Scotland has to that of the North of Ireland (much closer than the native English of places not farther removed from one another and with no sea between them) makes the interchange of words easy and often convenient. Many of those who condemn the use of what they call "Irish" words, have no scruple in introducing English and Doric words, which they try to pronounce and write according to Gaelic rules, apparently to make their identity somewhat obscure, when there are already two or three native Gaelic words much more to the point.

A few correspondents have complained that the work is too crowded, in places, with obsolete or English words, but only those given in other Gaelic Dictionaries figure here, although more prominence has been given to the character of Anglicisms. Words marked obsolete in some Dictionaries, may often have been obsolete for a long period in the districts in which the compilers of those particular works lived, while still used in other places. The usual rule hitherto adopted in Gaelic Dictionaries with regard to English words in Gaelic dress has been—clàrc, s.m. A clerk.

Sometimes Eng. or Eng. word is added, but not often. A new system has been adopted here, and all such words have been inserted thus—clàrc, s.m. Gaelic spelling of clerk.

This is the first Dictionary of the Gaelic language in which an attempt has been made to explain words by means of diagrams, and the first in which especial care has been taken in collecting localisms, the names of old Highland implements, &c., and their parts, many of which are now only to be found in one or two remote parishes of the Western Isles, from which they are fast disappearing. The lists of technical terms here given have never been published before, and the whole of the illustrations, with one or two exceptions, have been specially drawn for the work.

It is a cause of regret that type of a larger size could not have been used, but, owing to the great increase that would have caused in the bulk of the book, it was found to be impossible.

No attempt has been made to give a so-called phonetic spelling of each word as MacAlpine does. The orthodox spelling of the Gaelic language being practically phonetic on its own lines, by far the simplest way is to learn the correct sounds of the various Gaelic combinations of letters from some good text-book, of which there are many, and if possible, with the aid of a native Gaelic speaker.

Readers must use their own discretion in practising some of the forms given when translating from English into Gaelic. Many of the words which have here been added to MacLeod & Dewar's vocabulary are localisms and the persons or books from whom they were obtained being nearly always indicated by signs or initials, the districts in which they may be met with are easily found. Some such meanings while easily understood in one place, might be quite unintelligible even in another part of the same county. The name of a place given after any word or sentence signifies that it has been heard there, but its use may not be confined to that particular locality. Where dialectic quotations from common speech or books are given the dialectic form of spelling is usually retained. The past participles of verbs are spelt in the Dictionaries according to the old Gaelic rule, "leathann ri leathann," but there is a tendency among Gaelic writers at present to violate that rule and spell phonetically, as spadte for spadta, &c. Irregular forms of infinitives or present participles are not generally given by other Dictionaries under their roots, so they cannot be found unless you already know them. They are given here both under the roots and in their own places.

These pages are printed from the original stereotype plates. An Appendix has since been compiled of additional words and meanings received in proofs that arrived too late for their insertion in alphabetical order in the text, and also those found in books not accessible to me before the earlier parts were issued. That appendix would in itself fill a considerable volume but the issue of it, however important, requires a considerable sum of money which up to the present is not forthcoming.

EDWARD DWELLY.

The following abbreviated remarks, with the exception of those on pronunciation, are inserted here as reminders for those already acquainted with the rudiments of the language.

The compiler of this Dictionary made his first start with Munro's Gaelic Primer with great advantage. There is still an urgent need for a manual to teach the art of speaking Gaelic on the same lines as Spurrell's "Practical Lessons in Welsh."

E. DWELLY SETTING THE TYPE OF THE DICTIONARY.
The whole of the Dictionary was set up sitting, a startling innovation to printers.

The Gaelic Language.

PRONUNCIATION.

THE Gaelic Alphabet contains eighteen letters—a, b, c, d, e, f, g, h, i, l, m, n, o, p, r, s, t, u.

The vowels are divided into broad and small. The broad are a, o, and u; the small e, and i.

The Consonants are classed as—dentals d, t, s; labials b, f, m, p; linguals l, n, r; palatals c, g.

H is the mark of aspiration and is never found alone in a word, but always after the letters b, c, d, f, g, m, p, s, t.

There are two accents—the grave and acute. Either of these placed over a vowel indicates that it is long, and that it has a specific sound according to which is used. The accents also serve to distinguish between words that are the same in spelling but different in meaning.

In almost all polysyllables, excepting some words compounded with a preposition, the accent falls on the first syllable. The others are short and unaccented, and the vowels in that situation have in general short obscure sounds. Hence it happens that the vowels in these syllables are so often used indiscriminately.

There are no quiescent final vowels.

There are some sounds in Gaelic to which there are none perfectly similar in English, and the same combination does not invariably represent the same sound in different parts of the Highlands. The powers of the different letters may be explained with a certain degree of accuracy, yet much will still remain to be learned by the ear alone. As this subject is fully discussed and explained in "Gaelic as a Specific Subject" we must refer the reader to that work for fuller information on account of our limited space here. The following remarks are, however, reproduced, chiefly from "Còmhraidhean na Gàidhlig is am Beurla," by Rev. D. MacInnes, as giving a good general idea of Gaelic pronunciation to those quite unacquainted with the language.

Further remarks on pronunciation will be found in the body of this work under the respective letters.

SOUNDS OF THE VOWELS.

a long like a in far, as dàn, a poem; bàn, white.

à short like a in that, as pronounced by a Lowlander, not as by an Englishman, as fad, length; gad, with.

á long before dh like u drawled in burn, as ladhran, hoofs.

â short sound of foregoing, as lagh, law.

ä before an and ll, like ä above and u in fully, as clann, children; call, loss.

a in unaccented syllables has the obscure broad sound mentioned above.

è long like e in there, as gnè, kind.

é long like a in fume, as dé, yesterday; cé, earth.

ê short like e in jet, as dheth, of him or it.

ï short like a in rate, as teth, hot; leth, half.

e in unaccented syllables, has generally the short obscure sound, as colla, a wood.

long like e in me, as sid, weather; dith, want.

i short like i in king, as fir, new; min, meal.

i short like i in tight, as tigh, house; a stigh,

within; used only in these two words.

ò long like aw in fawn, as còrr heron; òl, drink.

ò short like o in modest, as cor, condition; orra, on them.

ò short like o in bowl, as dol, going; crodh, cattle.

o3 long like ow in down, as fonn, land; toll, hole.

ù long like oo in poor, as ùr, new; ùprait, bustle.

ù short like u in fully, as cur, sending; guth, voice.

SOUNDS OF THE DIPHTHONGS.

ai 1 like ä & i, as daimh, kinship.

ai 2 " ä & i, as daimh, of an ox.

ai 3 " ä, the i being silent, as faile, welcome.

ai 4 " ä, the i being silent, as tais, soft.

ai 5 " ä, short, the i being silent, as tairbhe, profit; airm, arms.

ao 1 " ä, the o being silent, as aog, death; caol, slender.

ea 1 " é short, & ä, as geall, wager.

ea 2 " é, short, & ä, as geal, white.

ea 3 " é, a being silent, as dèan, do.

ea 4 " é, a being silent, as lean, follow.

éi 1 " é, i being silent & dh sounded, as déidh, wish.

éi 2 " é, i is silent & ch sounded, as deich, ten.

éi 3 " é, the i being silent, as céile, spouse.

éi 4 " é, the i being silent, as ceist, question.

eò 1 " é slightly sounded & ò, as ceòl, music.

eò 2 " é slightly sounded and ò, as beothail, lively.

eu 1 " é, the u being silent, as ceum, a step.

ia 1 " i & a obscure, as ciall, sense; iar, west.

io 1 " i the o being silent, as lion, fill.

io 2 " i obscure & o silent, as ciònt, guilt.

io 3 " i, the o being silent, as iomlan, complete.

io 4 " u in up, as ciod? what?

iù 1 " i & ü, as fiù, worthy.

iù 2 " i & ü, as siubhar, a yew-tree.

iù 3 " ü, the i being silent, as diùt, refuse.

iù 4 " ü, the i being silent, as diùgh, to-day.

òì 1 " ò & i, as clòimh, wool.

òì 2 " ò & i, as clòimh, mange.

òì 3 " ò, the i being silent, as toiseach, beginning.

ua 1 " ä & a obscure, as cluas, ear.

ùì 1 " ù & i silent, as dùil, hope.

ui 2 " ä & i silent as sluig, swallow; duine, man.

SOUNDS OF THE TRIPHTHONGS.

The Triphthongs are aoi, eai, eoi, iai, uai.

As the sounds of the diphthongs depend on those of the dual vowels, so the sounds of the triphthongs depend on those of the diphthongs. The rule that the vowel immediately before or immediately after a plain palatal or lingual often loses its sound holds good in regard to the triphthongs. The vowel in the triphthong that loses its sound is the last i.

SOUNDS OF THE CONSONANTS.

bh, at the beginning and end of a word is like v, as bha, was. In the middle of a word it is sometimes like v, and sometimes like w, as leabhar, book; but often silent, as dubhar, shade.

- c, before a broad vowel, like c in can, as càrn, a heap of stones.
before a small vowel, like k in keen, as cinn, heads.
ch, before or after a broad vowel, is like ch in loch, as chuir, put; deoch, a drink.
ch, before or after a small vowel is like the Greek chi as pronounced in Scotland, as chi, shall see; deich, ten.
c, at the end of a syllable is like chk, as mac, son.—Exceptions, chunnaic, ionraic, òir-dheirc, éiric.
chd, is like ch in loch with k added. d, before a broad vowel is like d in door, as dorus, door.
d, before a small vowel is like d in dew, as dàan, do.
dh, before or after a broad vowel has no sound in English exactly like it.
dh, before or after a small vowel is like y in yield, as dhìbh, of you; féidh, deer (pl.)
f, is like f in English.
fh, at the beginning of a word is silent, except in the words fhuaire, fhathast, when it is like h in hat.
g, before a broad vowel is like g in go, as gabh, take.
g, before a small vowel is like g in give, as gáill, yield.
gh, before or after a small vowel is like y in yield, as ghéill, yielded; faigh, get.
gh, before or after a broad vowel, has no sound in English exactly like it.
l, before a broad vowel has no sound in English exactly like it.
l, before a small vowel is like l in lure, as liadh, a ladle, or blade of an oar.
ll, at the end of a syllable or word preceded by i, is like ll in million, as pill, return; pillinn, returning; when preceded by a broad vowel it has no sound like it in English.
m, is like m in English.
mh, at the beginning and end of a word or flanked by vowels, is like v, as mharbh (pro. varv) killed; námh, an enemy.
mh, after a vowel and followed by a consonant, is generally silent, but it imparts a nasal sound to the vowel preceding it, as comhradh, dialogue; and is sometimes sounded u or o, as in samhradh, summer.
n, before a broad vowel has no sound in English exactly like it.
n, before a small vowel is like n in new, as neach, a person.
nn, after a broad vowel has no sound exactly like it in English.
nn, after i is like n in pinion.
n, after c, g, m, t, is usually like r, as cnámh, decay, digest; gníomh, deed, action; mnathan, women; énn, envy; but correct speakers pronounce it n.
p, like p in English.
ph, at the beginning of a word is like f as phill, returned.
s, before or after a broad vowel is like s in English.
s, before or after a small vowel is like sh, as sin, stretch; tais, soft.
sh, at the beginning of a word is like h, as shin (pro. heen), stretched.
t, before or after a broad vowel is like t in tone, as tog, raise; lot, a wound.
t, before or after a small vowel is like the first element of ch in chin, as teine, fire.
th, at the beginning of a word is like h, as thig, come.
th, in the middle and end of a word is silent, as bathar, (pro. ba-ar,) goods; báth (pro. bá) drown.

l, n, r, are the only letters that are doubled in the middle of a word. No letter is doubled at the beginning of a word.

ORTHOGRAPHY.

The chief exceptions to the above rules frequently met with in writing are:—
is, is; so, this; sud, yonder; ged, although; and tigh, a house.

We have continued the usual way of spelling is and ged throughout this work, but there is an increasing tendency to spell “so” seo, “sud” síod, and “tigh” taigh, so we have adopted these forms as being more in uniformity with the spelling of the rest of the language. Seo and síod are also the more correct as representing the Old Gaelic forms seo and síut.

The Orthography generally adopted in this Dictionary is that used by the best scholars of the present day.

INFLECTIONS.

OF THE ARTICLE.

The following statement from Dr. Gillies' Gaelic Grammar, shows the Article in position before Nouns of both genders beginning with every letter of the Alphabet, and in such relation with Prepositions as to bring out all the possible forms.

OF VERBS.

In this Dictionary the root of the verb is always given first, immediately followed by the Pres. Part. Irregular inflections of all Verbs are also given.

The 2nd. Pers. singular Imperative; Mood is the ROOT or THEME of every Gaelic Verb.

Indicative Mood, Active Voice—

The Past Tense of a Verb is formed by aspirating the initial consonant of its root, as—Paisg, sold thou; phaisg e, he folded. Verbs beginning with l, n, r, sc, sg, sm, sp, st, do not take the aspirated form, and when a Verb commences with a vowel the past tense is formed by prefixing dh' to the root, as—òl, drink thou; dh'òl e, he drank.

The Future Tense is formed by adding idh to the root of all Verbs, as—Buail, strike thou; buailidh mi, I shall strike. When the last vowel of the root is broad aidh is added instead of idh.

The Infinitive Mood and Pres. Part. are generally formed by adding adh to the root, as—Buail, strike, a buailadh to strike; a' buailadh, striking.

OF SUBSTANTIVES.

In this Dictionary the noun is given in the Nom. Sing., immediately followed by the terminations of the Gen. Sing. and Nom. Plur. All irregular inflections of other cases are also given. When only one termination, a or an, is given, it is that of the Nom. Plur., and the Gen. Sing. is in such cases the same as the Nom. Sing. When the only termination given is not a or an, it is that of the Gen. Sing. and Nom. Plur., which in such cases are alike.

General Rules.—The Nom. and Dat. Sing. of Masc. Nouns are alike.

The Gen. and Dat. Sing. of Fem. Nouns are alike.

The Gen. and Voc. Sing. of Masc. Nouns are alike.

The Nom. and Voc. Sing. of Fem. Nouns are alike.

PLURAL.—The Nom. Plur. is often like the Gen. Sing., or it is formed by adding a, an, or ean to the Nom. Sing.

The Gen. Pl. is either like the Nom. Sing. or Nom. Plur.

The Dat. Pl. is like the Nom. Pl., the older form in ibh or aibh being practically obsolete.

The Voc. Pl. is the same as the Nom., aspirated and ending in a or an.

A noun with the article before it is definite, and without the article, indefinite.

A definite masc. noun aspirates the Gen. and Dat. Sing.; but a definite fem. noun aspirates the Nom. and Dat. Sing.

A definite noun beginning with d, l, n, r, s, or t, does not aspirate any case.

Nouns beginning with a consonant, and whose last vowel is broad.

The Gen. Sing. is usually formed by inserting i after the last vowel of the Nom. Sing.

Nouns beginning with a consonant, and whose last vowel is small.

The Gen. Sing. masc. and fem. is generally formed by adding e to the Nom.; but Nouns of more than one syllable generally terminate alike in all cases in the Singular.

Nouns commencing with a vowel.

A definite masc. Noun requires t- before it in the Nom. Sing., and h- in the Nom. and Dat. Pl.

A definite fem. Noun requires h- before it in the Gen. Sing., and in the Nom. and Dat. Plur.

A definite masc. Noun beginning with s followed by a vowel, or a liquid requires t- before it in the Gen. and Dat. Sing., and a definite fem. Noun in the Nom. and Dat. Sing.

OF ADJECTIVES.

In this Dictionary Adjectives are given in the Positive form, followed by the termination of the first Comparative.

Adjectives are declined by number, gender, case, and form, and their oblique cases are formed from the Nom., according to the rules already given for the formation of the cases of nouns.

The Nom. Sing. Masc. and Fem. end alike, but the feminine is aspirated.

The Gen. Sing. Fem. is formed from the Gen. Sing. Masc., by dropping the aspirated form, and, if a monosyllable, it generally ends in e or a.

The Plural of all adjectives of one syllable ends in a (e if the preceding vowel is small) and of those of more than one syllable, like the Nom. Sing.

The Nom. Dat. and Voc. Fem., and the Gen. and Voc. Masc. are aspirated in the Sing. either with or without the article.

The Dat. of an adjective combined with a definite noun is aspirated in both genders.

Adjectives of two or more syllables seldom add e to the Gen. Sing.

An adjective beginning with a vowel admits of no initial change, and one ending in a vowel admits of no final change.

COMPARISON.—There are only two degrees of comparison in Gaelic, the Positive, and Comparative, and a Superlative of extent.

The Comparative has three forms of Comparison, the first, second, and third.

The first form is like the Gen. Sing. Fem., the second is formed from the first by changing e into id, and the third from the second by changing id into ead; as—

Bàn, fair, 1st C. bàine, 2nd C. bainid, 3rd C. and Abst. Noun, bàinead, whiteness Orion, little, 1st C. crine, 2nd C. cruid, 3rd C. crinead, littleness.

The three forms of comparison take the aspirated form, but no final change whatever.

Gen.	an uain bhig,	nan uan beaga.
Dat.	do'n uan beag,	na h-uain bheaga, or [uanaibh beaga.

COMPOUND NOUNS.

When two Nouns combine to form a compound Noun the first is declined regularly. The second has the Genitive form always and in all the cases. It may be Singular or Plural. If it is Singular, it takes the Aspiration of an Adjective in agreement with the first Noun, if Plural it takes the Aspirate throughout.

Singular.

	a full tide	a hen-house	a nut-wood
Nom.	làn-mara	taigh-chearc	coille-chnò
Gen.	làn-mhara	taigh-chearc	coille-chnò
Dat.	làn-mara	taigh-chearc	coille-chnò
Voc.	a làn-mhara,	a thaigh-chearc,	a choille-chnò

When a Noun and Adjective combine to form a Compound Noun both parts are regularly declined as if they stood apart.

Coileach-dubh, a black-cock.

Singular.

	Coileach-dubh	Coilich-dhubha
Nom.	coileach-dubh	coilich-dhubha
Gen.	coilich-dhubh	coileach-dubha
Dat.	coileach-dubh	coilich-dhubha
Voc.	a choilich-dhubh	a choileacha-dubha

Final n and l of the first element prevents aspiration of initial dental of the second—aig sgoil-dannsaigh, at a dancing-school.

When an Adjective and Noun combine, the Adjective retains the Nominative form throughout, and the Noun is regularly declined and has the aspiration throughout.

Dubh-fhacal,

a dark saying

[If you cannot find the word you want in the body of the work, look for it in the Appendix.]

A a

A, ailm, the Elm-tree. The 1st. letter of the Gaelic alphabet, now in use.

It has three sounds; (1) both long and short. Long, like a in father as—àl, brood, àr, slaughter. Short, like a in fat, cat, as pronounced by a Lowlander, but not as pronounced by an Englishman, as—falt, hair; cas, foot. (2) both long and short, when immediately preceding dh and gh; in which state it has no corresponding sound in English. Long as adhradh, worship, teaghlach, family. Short, as lagh, law; cladh, trench. (3) short and obscure, like e in hinder, as—an, am, a', the; ma, if'; na'm, na'n, if that; and the plural terminations—a, an, as laghanna, laws; beanntan, mountains.

a', gen. & dat. masc., and nom. & dat. fem., of the art. The.

Used before the three labials B M P, and the two palatals C and G, when aspirated. A' mhàthair, the mother; a' choin, of the dog; a' phàisde, of the child; a' ghrùagach, the damsel. Aspirated F is preceded by an, as—an fhuir, of the man; an fhreagairt, the answer.

A, the sign of the Vocative case of substantives, as—A dhuine dhlomhain! O vain man!

a, poss. pron. His, her, its. After a, his, the substantive is always aspirated, but after a, her, it is plain.

Amhac, his son; a nighean, her daughter. A, his, is omitted and an apostrophe inserted in its place before a word commencing with a vowel or fh, and before a consonant when preceded by a prep. ending in a vowel; as—gu 'mhac, to his son; 'fhalt, his hair; 'aghaidh, his countenance. In the fem. an h is interposed between a, her, and the noun, as—a h-each, her horse; a h-eun, her bird. When the fh is followed by a consonant, the pronoun is retained in the masc., as—a fhlùiche, his wetness. Cha b'urrainn iad a thogail no 'fhagail, they could neither lift nor leave him (lit.—his lifting or leaving); theab iad a mharbhadh, they had almost killed him, (lit.—his killing.) In a nighean, his daughter, n is aspirated in pronunciation, but the letter h is not written after l, n, r, in Scottish Gaelic. In some instances the difference between the plain and aspirated sound of these letters is only to be detected by a keen ear, while in others it is easily distinguishable.

a, rel. pron., gen. & dat. Who, which, whom, that, what.

Gach gaisgeach a b'aoisda, dàn, each hero that was aged and doid; a' bhean a bha tinn, the woman that was sick; an cù a bha cailte, the dog that was lost; na daoine a chaidh seachad, the men that went by.

Sometimes a sign of the past tense, 'Nuair a thubhairt e rium, when he said to me.

a, prep. 1 At, to, into. 2 About, in the act of.

a, prep. Out of.

a' taigh na daorsa, out of the house of bondage; a' tìr na h-Eiphit, out of the land of Egypt; a' baile, out of town, from home.

a', prep. for ann, in. Clod a chuir sin a' d' cheann? what put that into your head?

a, particle used in adverbs, phrases, or before numerals when not followed by nouns, as—a bhos, on this side; a dhà, two.

a', sign of the pres. part. (for ag.) Used before consonants, as—a' fàs, growing; a' dànachd, shutting; a' dol, going.

a, sign of the infn. mood, as—a bhualadh, to strike; a cheangal an duine, to bind the man. [Always aspirates word following.]

-air, termination of nouns, appearing also as -eir, -ir, -oir, and -uir, and signifying agent or doer.

air, prep. On, upon. 2 Of, concerning. 3 For, on account of. 4 By. 5 With. 6 Also signifying the same as if joined in its first sense with the pers. pronoun e. 7 On, an oath or assertion. 8 On, upon, denoting time. 9 With, accompanied by. 10 Claim of debt.

The above are the meanings of air used as a simple preposition, but it has idiomatic uses almost without number in various combination with verbs and other parts of speech.

Na'm faighinn am fear a tha air chall oirbh, if I should find the man that is lost FROM you, [if translated here BY you, it implies that "you" lost the man, which may not be true] theich e orm, he fled AWAY FROM me; chluich e an cleas orm, he played the trick ON me; cheil e an gnòthach orm, he hid the matter FROM me; ghàir e orm, he laughed AT me; ni mi sgeul ort, I will make a tale (inform) AGAINST you; dh'ith e ar n-lasg oirnn, he ate our fish FOR (ON) us, [i.e. in spite of us, not to oblige us.]

In these examples air translates differently into English in every case, but the differences are caused by the English verbs, each of which requires its own preposition as a complement. Classing these under the various meanings would hide from the learner the fact that the Gaelic prep. has the same meaning in each case—adversity, adverse circumstances, mishap, disaster, trickery suffered, &c.

Examples given by MacAulpine:—

Iomradh air do ghliocas, a report of thy wisdom; air beinn, on a mountain; air sgàth, for the sake of; air ainm, by name; air bheagan, possessing little; air an aobhar sin, for that reason; air mo shon-sa dheth, for my part, as far as I am concerned; air éigin, with much ado, [with much difficulty, scarcely, hardly]; air a h-aon, for one, [thuit trì le Bran air a h-aon, Bran, for one, killed three]; air seachran, astray; air falbh, away, from home; air uairibh, sometimes; tha eagal air, he is afraid; tha acras air, he is hungry; air chor, so that; air chor éigin, somehow or other; duine air chor éigin, some person or other; air meud 's gu bheil e, let it be ever so great; [air a mheud 's gu'n tig dhiubh, however many of them come]; cha d'fhuair mi ni air, I got nothing for it; dè tha a' cur air? what is the matter with him?

Examples from Stewart's Gaelic Grammar: ON, UPON—air an làr, on the ground; air an là sin, on that day. CLAIM OF DEBT—ioc dhomh na bheil agam ort I pay me what thou owest / cia meud a th'ig mo thighearn ort-sa? how much owest thou unto my lord? OATH—air m'fhacal, upon my word; air làimh t'ath-air's do sheanair, by the hand of your father and grandfather; [air na chunnaidh thu riamh na fosgail e, for the sake of all you ever saw do not open it.] (Thig air) SPEAK or TREAT OF—thig mo bheul air do cheartas is air do chliù, my mouth shall speak of thy justice and thy praise; sin chis air a bheil mi nis a' teachd, that is a matter of which I am now to treat; tog ort; rouse thyself! chaidh agam air, I prevailed over him; 's ann orms' a chaidh, it is I that was worsted. Thug e am monadh air, he betook himself to the mountain. IN RESPECT OF—cha'n fhaca mi an samhail air olcas, I never saw their like for badness; air a lughdach, however small it be. JOINED WITH, ACCOMPANIED BY—mòran iarunn air bheag faobhar, much iron with little edge; oidhche bha mi 'n a theach air mhòran bidh's air bheagan aodaich, I was a night in his house with plenty of food but scanty clothing; air leth làimh, having but one hand. MEASURE, DIMENSION—da throid air àirde, two feet in height. ALTERNATION—Olc air mhrèh leate, whether you take it well or ill.

Examples from Armstrong:—

Air chòir, nobly, properly, as usual [truthfully]; air seo, upon this, then; air iomrall, astray; air chuthach, mad; air neo, else, or else; air muin, on, upon, above; chaidh e air a muin, he had carnal connection with her;

bithidh sin air bhuil, that will come to pass.

Addition 1:—

'Nuair a thig air duine thig air uile, this means that fortunes and misfortunes do not come singly, and is a Gaelic equivalent of it never rains but it pours; tha a' mhisg air, he is drunk; cha'n 'eil airach—, there is nothing for it but—. Chaidh e air chéilidh orra, he went to visit them; air torradh, at a funeral; air banais, at a wedding; air a lughad is fheaird, the smaller the better; bha e air mo mhuin gu'n &c., or bha e air m'adann gu'n &c., he was always worrying me to &c., gabh air, thrash him; éirich air, belabour him; éirich air an bran, sing the song well; mór orm agus beag agam, very patronizing to me and little thought or by me.

Air, it may be stated, always signifies something of a very temporary duration.

[Air governs the Dative case of nouns following it. Though it is said not to cause aspiration by rule, there are many instances in set phrases in which it does, as, air dheireadh, behind; air thoiseach, before; air chionn, in readiness for, [air chionn dhomh bhi deas, by the time I was ready.] It may be observed that where it causes aspiration it cannot be translated upon,—tha i air chall, she is lost.

The reason for this difference seems to be that air in Modern Gaelic misrepresents the old prepositions ar and for. Ar meant before, against, beside, and it caused aspiration of the word following, because it formerly ended in a vowel (are or ari.) For meant upon, and did not cause aspiration. This for is the air proper of Modern Gaelic grammar.]

Examples given above in brackets, thus [] are additions to those given by the authors mentioned.

PARTS OF A SWINGLE-TREE:—

- 1 Muiseal, bridle of plough.
- 2 An t-amail, swingle-tree.
- 3 An greallag ceannarach, land or high side small swingle-tree.
- 4 An greallag meadhonach, middle swingle-tree.
- 5 An greallag clais, an greallag sgriob, furrow small swingle-tree.
- 6 Beairt-tharruing, trace-chains.
- 7 Liùdain, levers.
- 8 An lùdan ceangail, connecting lever.
- 9 Na t'inneachan dubailte, double short link.

Only two horses are generally used in the plough in the Highlands, but as three are sometimes employed for subsoiling, &c., it has been thought advisable to give an illustration of a swingle-tree for 3 horses, so that that the name of any part may be found if required. When swingle-tree for 2 horses is used, "the middle swingle-tree" (No. 4) is wanting, and the compensating lever apparatus (Nos. 7, 8, and 9) is dispensed with. In such cases the other parts retain the names given above.

 làn, the sluggard's age, eighty at low-water, sixty at high-water, and scarcely twenty when there's a full moon. (At low-water, while the sea-ware is being gathered for manure, the sluggard is as feeble as a man of eighty,
 at high-water, when less difficult work is engaged in, he is a little livelier, but still incapable of much exertion, but when night comes, especially if there should be moonlight, he is as lively as a young fellow of twenty, and probably walks many miles on courting errands.)
 aois, s.f. pl. People, community of any particiùil, musicians.

 aois-dàna,  s. pl.* Bards, poets. 2 Rehearsers of ancient poetry. 3 Genealogists. 4 Soothsayers. The aois-dàna were in high esteem throughout the Highlands. So late as the end of the 17th. century they sat in the sreathe or circle among the nobles and chiefs of families. They took the preference of the ollamh or doctor in medicine. After the extinction of the Druids, they were brought in to preserve the genealogy of families, and to repeat genealogical traditions at the succession of every chieftain. They had great influence over all the powerful men of their time. Their persons, their houses, their villages, were sacred. Whatever they asked was given them; not always, however, out of respect, but from fear of their satire, which frequently followed a denial of their requests. They lost by degrees, through their own intolerance and importunity, all the respect which their order had so long enjoyed, and consequently all their wonted profits and privileges. Martin says "They shut their door and windows for a day's time, and lay on their backs in darkness with a stone upon their belly, and plaids about their heads and eyes, and thus they pumped their brains for rhetorical encomiums."

arsa, v.defect. Said, quoth. [The s of the Gaelic really belongs to the pronoun, "sé" or "si"—ar sé, said he; ar si, said she.] This verb is never used with propriety, except in expressions corresponding to said I, said he, &c. In the order of syntax, the nom. case never precedes this verb, not even by poetical license; this forms the distinction between it and the corresponding thubhairt. It is right to say "duine a thubhairt sin," wrong to say "duine arsa sin," a man who said that. Ars' an ceannaiche, said the buyer: ars' òighean nan aodann gradhach, said the maids of the lovely visages.

1. In adding the suffix te, the rule that consonants must come between vowels of the same class is not in every case regarded, because in speech it is not conformed to. In the case of Verbs of one syllable ending in l, n, r, or s, and all those of more than one syllable, the letter i is introduced before the final consonant to make the spelling accord with the pronunciation. It is left out in other cases for the same reason.

b, Beith, birch-tree, the second letter of the Gaelic alphabet now in use. It sounds somewhat harder than b, and softer than p in English. When immediately followed by h, it has an aspirated sound like v in English, as bhuail, struck. At the end of a word or syllable, however, the aspiration sometimes passes, in certain dialects, into the sound of the vowel u, as searbh, bitter; fiabhrus, fever; and before consonants it is frequently silent.

bards were held by them in the highest veneration. Princes and warriors did not disdain to claim affinity with them. The Celts, being passionately fond of poetry, would listen to no instructor, whether from priest or philosopher, unless it were conveyed in rhymes. Hence the word bàrd meant also a priest, philosopher, or teacher of any kind. We often find a bard entrusted with the education of a prince, and about three hundred years ago, a Highland chief had seldom any other instructor. Such was the respect paid to the ancient bards, that, according to Diodorus, the Sicilian, they could put a stop to armies in the heat of battle. After an engagement they raised the song over the deceased, and extolled the heroes who survived.

When a bard appeared in an army, it was either as a herald or ambassador, hence his person and property were sacred in the midst of his enemies and amid their wildest ravages. In earlier times he never bore arms, and Owen asserts that it was unlawful to unsheathe a weapon in his presence. Among the ancient British there were, according to Jones, three orders of bards—the Privardd, (Priomh-bhàrd) or chief bard; the Poswardd, who taught what was set forth by the privardd; and the Arwyddwardd, i.e. the ensign bard, or herald-at-arms, who employed himself in genealogy, and in blazoning the arms of princes and nobles, as well as altering them according to their dignity or deserts. Owen observes that their dress was sky-blue, an emblem of peace.

Among the Irish Celts the bards enjoyed many extraordinary privileges. The chief bard was called Filidh, or Ollamh ri dàn, a graduate or doctor in poetry, and had thirty inferior bards as attendants, whilst a bard of the second order had fifteen. The Gael of Scotland was not behind his brother Celts in his veneration for the bards, for they had lands bestowed on them, which became hereditary in their families. A Highland chief retained two bards, who, like those of the Irish, had their retinue of disciples; and though the office did by no means procure the same deep respect as in times of old, yet it was always filled to the utmost. The reasons for the decline of their power will be found under "aois-dàna."

When the name of a particular district is given for any term above, it does not follow that such term is peculiar to that district, but only that it is in use there. Many of the terms are common to the whole of the Highlands.

A number of additional boating terms were,
unfortunately, received too late to be stereotyped here; but they will be found in the Appendix.

In addition to the authorities mentioned on p.
xv, considerable assistance has been obtained in compiling these boating terms from:—

Bealltunn, -e, s.f. May-day, first day of May.

On the first of May was held a great Druidical festival in favour of the god Belus. On this day fires were kindled on the mountain tops for the purposes of sacrifice; and between these fires the cattle were driven, to preserve them from contagion till next May-day. On this day it was usual to extinguish all the hearth fires, in order that they should be re-kindled from this purifying flame. In many parts of the Highlands the young folks of the district used to meet on the moors on 1st. May. They cut a table in the green sod, of a round figure, by cutting a trench in the ground of sufficient circumference to hold the whole company. They then kindled a fire, and dressed a repast of eggs and milk of the consistency of custard. They kneaded a cake of oatmeal, which was toasted at the embers against a stone. After the custard was eaten, they divided the cake into as many portions as there were persons in the company, as much alike as possible in size and shape. They daubed one of the pieces with charcoal till it was black all over, and they were then all put into a bonnet together, and each one, blindfolded, drew out a portion. The bonnet holder was entitled to the last bit, and whoever drew the black bit was the devoted person who was to be sacrificed to Baal, whose favour they meant to implore in rendering the year productive. The devoted person was compelled to leap three times over the flames.

Bean a ghaol, the wife of his affections; goir-ea bean dith, she shall be called woman; bean nan deagh bheas, a virtuous woman; air a bhreith le mnaoi, born of a woman; mar mhnaoi, as a wife; bean a' bhaile, the tenant or proprietrix of a place; bean an taighe, the landlady or goodwife; bithidh taobh an teine aig caraaid bean an taighe, the goodwife's friend will be near the fire; bithidh caraaid bean an taighe an uachdar an taighe, the goodwife's friend will be over the house. The last two sayings do not necessarily mean that the goodwife will be nasty to her husband's friends, but merely that her own friends will naturally feel more at home in the house. When addressing one's mother in Gaelic, the expression "a bhean" (woman) is used and not "a mhàthair."

beannachadh-bàird, s.m. Poet's congratulation. It was the custom in the Highlands, of old, to meet the bride coming forth from her chamber with her maidens on the morning after her marriage, and to salute her with a poetical blessing called beannachadh-bàird.—An Gàidheal, ii, 63. If, at any jovial meeting, any man retired, for however short a time, he was obliged, before he was permitted to resume his seat, to make an apology for his absence in rhyme. If he had no talent for poetry, or if, from humour, he did not choose to comply, which was seldom the case, he was obliged to pay such a proportion of the reckoning as the company thought proper to propose. This, according to Martin, was beannachadh-bàird.^{} bho, prep. Another form of "o" which is the better of the two. Often written in conjunction with the personal pronouns thus:—

1st. sing. bhuaam, from me, pl. bhuaian, from us
2nd. bhuaat, from thee, bhuaibh, from you
3rd. m. bhuaith, from him, bhuaipa, (m. & f.)
f. bhuaipe, from her, from them.

The forms under o are preferable to these. [Dr. Gillies says—"The p of (bhuaip) or uaip, now used for the fern form of the 3rd per. sing. is both phonetically and historically wrong. The form "uaithe" is fern in structure, and analogous to leithe and rithe, and its use as a masculine prep. pronoun is grossly incorrect. Uaidh (or bhuaidh) is the correct modern form of Old Gaelic uad, from him." Dr. G. is literally right, although custom is against him, and "bhuaipe" from her, being a firmly established form, both in speaking and writing, it is never likely to be altered in the Highlands. To substitute bhuaeithe for bhuaips now would cause unnecessary confusion, but bhuaeidh for him, could be used as easily as bhuaith or bhuaeithe. Were the Gaelic language taught in all the schools in the Highlands, popular mistakes like this would never get a hold.] "Bho" is used after a vowel or vowel sound, also when it begins a sentence; "o" is used after a pronounced consonant according to choice.—D.M. †† says "bho" in the best dialects. * says "bho" is used in all the Isles.

breacan, -ain, pl. -an, [& -ain] s.m. Highland plaid. 2 Tartan. Parti-coloured cloth was used by the Celts from the earliest times but the variety of colours in the breacan was greater or less, according to the rank of the wearer. That of the ancient kings had seven colours, that of the druids six, and that of the nobles four. In the days of Martin the tartans seemed to be used to distinguish the inhabitants of different districts, and not the members of different families as at present. He expressly says that the inhabitants of the various islands were not all dressed alike, but that the sets and colours of the various tartans varied from isle to isle. As he does not mention the use of a special pattern by each family, it would appear that such a distinction is a modern one, and taken from the ancient custom of a tartan for each district, the family or clan originally most numerous in each part eventually adopting as their distinctive clan tartan the tartan of such district. Martin's information was not obtained on hearsay, he was born in Skye and reared in the midst of Highland customs.

breacanach, a. Tartan. 2 Plaided. Aodach breacanach, tartan clothes.

breacan-an-fhéilidh, s.m. Belted plaid. This

70. Breacan singile mu dhruine is the original garb of the Highlanders, and formed the chief part of their costume. The breacan in its simple form is now seldom used. It consisted of a plain piece of tartan, two yards in width, and four or six in length. In dressing, this was carefully plaited in the middle, of a breadth suitable to the size of the wearer, and sufficient to extend from one side around his back to the other, leaving as much at each end as would cover the front of the body, overlapping each other. The plaid being thus prepared, was firmly bound round the loins with a leathern belt, in such a manner that the lower side fell down to the middle of the knee-joint and then, while there were the foldings behind, the cloth was double in front. The upper part was then fastened on the left shoulder with a large brooch or pin, so as to display to the best advantage the tastefulness of the arrangement, the two ends being sometimes suffered to hang down, but that on the right side, which was necessarily the longer, was more usually tucked under the belt.—Logan.

"It is danced by a man and a woman. The man has a rod in his right hand, variously called slachdan druidheachd, (druidic wand), and slachdan geasachd, (magic wand.) The man and the woman gesticulate and attitudinize before one another, dancing round and round, in and out, crossing and recrossing, changing and exchanging places. The man flourishes the wand over his own head and over the head of the woman, whom he touches with the wand, and who falls down, as if dead, at his feet. He bemoans his dead "carlin," dancing and gesticulating round her body. He then lifts up her left hand, and looking into the palm, breathes upon it, and touches it with the wand. Immediately the limp hand becomes alive, and moves from side to side and up and down. He rejoices and dances round the figure on the floor. Having done the same to the right hand, and to the left and right foot in succession, they also become alive and move. Though the limbs are living, the body is still inert. The man kneels over the woman and breathes into her mouth and touches her heart with the wand. The woman comes to life, and springs up confronting the man. Then the two dance vigorously and joyously as in the first part. The tune varies with the varying phases of the dance. It is played by a piper or fiddler, or sung as a "port-a-beul" (mouth-tune) by a looker-on or by the performers themselves. The air is quaint and irregular" and the words which are curious and archaic commence as follows:—

"Caileach an dùdain, dùdain, dùdain, Caileach an dùdain, cum do dheireadh rium"

Merriment. 5 The ancient Highland manner of noting classical pipe-music by a combination of definite syllables, by which means the various tunes could be the more easily recollected by the learner.

Through the kindness of Chas. Bannatyne Esq., M.B., C.M., Salsburgh, Holytown, we are able to give here the only systematic key to this ancient system of notation for "ceòl-mór" ever published. As MacLeod of Gesto, who published the MacCrimmons' tunes in canntaireachd, took them down phonetically, it is rather difficult to describe the system minutely. This must not be lost sight of in translating tunes. The complete key is here given. A few of the notes resemble one another very closely, but the changes used are indicated, and the pronunciations are given approximately, in brackets. The key note, "low A" is always represented in this notation by in, probably a contraction of "an dawa son," the second one, to distinguish the key note from the first note of the chanter—"low G." "High A" is always i, but in a canntaireachd word it is often denoted by a preceding l, thus, liu, and so confusion is avoided. "Low A" is either in, en, em, or simply n after some notes. The alternatives seem to have been used for the sake of euphony. D note is a and B note is u, but the qualifying effect of the grace notes—"high G" represented by h, and D represented by d or h (the latter a contraction of [a']chorag, the finger playing D) prevents any confusion. The note E is represented by i. At the beginning of most of the MacCrimmon tunes and variations is i, which gives the key note. It stands for E (soh) the dominant of the "low A" (doh.) Where it does not occur, the tune will be found to start with a word like hien, which denotes E with "high G" grace note, and then "low A." The vowel for F note is ie, and it also is always made certain by its grace note d or h. "High G" is u, often distinguished by a preceding h. "High A" is often vi, to distinguish it from E note. When F succeeds "high A" in a tune, the word is often vie. Regarding grace notes, h, the aspirate, qualifies all notes down to "low A," but often where ha obviously means "B" note, it must be concluded that it should have been written cha. Similarly ho ho should be ho cho. The letter d, is used, as is t, to denote both "high G" and D grace notes, but an examination of the notation word, makes a mistake unlikely, thus, dieliu means F with "high G" grace note, and then "high A" and G. Tihi means two E's played with two G grace notes. T and d resemble each other very closely in Gaelic, but the context in canntaireachd makes it always easy to see whether "high G" grace note or D is meant. It is necessary to explain the compound grace note systems. Dr is doubling of "low G" by a touch of D grace note, drin is doubling of "low G" by a touch of D grace note and open "low A" and so on over the whole scale. The letters dr are obviously a contraction of dà uair, "two times" or twice.

Note and grace note key to MacLeod's MacCrimmon tunes in Canntaireachd. Basis, a nine line stave or scale, each line representing a note of the chanter.

* Beats are combined forms, such as "hiriri."

† A stoach.

‡ A mach.

§ Fosgailte.

Tri means doubling of "low G" by D grace note, and as A is opened, double E by F and E and open E. This is a crunluath form. Tro is the same, at first, but the doubling of E is done with the grips from o or C note. This is "crunluath a mach." These examples will make the rest easy. In many tunes where a tr type occurs, it obviously when translated, should only have been a dr type, this confusion being due to the similarity of d and t in Gaelic. The shake on "high A" is vivi. The other shakes are represented by rr, according to where the beats or shakes are taken from. This seems to be a contraction of gearradh, a shake. A simple touch of a note before opening is always represented by a single r. For instance, such a word as radin signifies that B is to be touched with "low G" (lúdag) before opening; din is "low A" with D grace note. Ho radin, is the C note o, with "high G" grace note keeping the ra below D note, also an A note. Rules for the grace note scheme. 1. All grace notes and grace note types are forestrokes, that is, they occur before the notes they embellish. They are appoggiaturas or semi-quaver notes, or acciaturas or demi-semi-quaver notes, which predominate. 2. All grace notes in canntaireachd are represented by consonants. 3. All compound forms are made up by combining single forms. 4. All leading or scale notes are represented by vowels. 5. All note forms with m or n in them contain "low A." 6. Grace notes h and d are qualifying or modulating grace notes. 7. Doublings are represented by dr, triplings by tr, compound types by combinations of these. 8. Open doublings above D are represented by dir, such as dirie, where the note is doubled by itself and the note above it. Dr denotes closed doublings, dir open doublings. Grace note forms defined. Grace note forms consist of single, double, and compound. The single group includes all simple forms, together with the "da-lugh" variation form. The double includes the single and double types of "tri-lugh" and "ceithir-lugh." The single type of tri-lugh is composed of three low A's graced by G, D, and E grace notes, and it precedes the note embellished. An example of this is "hininindo," the syllable do being C graced by D. This type is called fosgailte or open, and is opposed by the double or closed form, represented by such a word as "hindirinto." The latter is called a steach or inside, when opposed to a type like "hodorito," which is said to be a mach or outside, as the grips are taken from the note played. The types last named are also breabach forms, having a "kick" note at the finish. The crun-lugh or ceithir-lugh forms are also fosgailte, a mach and a steach. The word "hadatri," which is a mach. "Hiodrata-tiriri" is a pure "clabh-lugh"—the chest or creel of fingers, because every finger on the chanter is engaged in some way, either acting or acted on. In bagpipe music the variations are all named from the acting fingers. and the old pipers counted their time from the number of fingers engaged in the several parts of a tune. "Chin-drine" may be taken as an example of "leum-lugh," the jump of the fingers. This is low A played by D grace note, then G, doubled by D, low A then opened, and F rapidly opened from it. "Hiriri" is an example of a beat form. The playing of two low A's by touching low G twice with the little finger is "rìrin" or "rùrin." The prosodic quality of the syllables forming the notation, together with the spacing and punctuation, give the time and rhythm of the tunes. earn, cairn [& cuirn], s.m. Cairn, heap or pile of stones loosely thrown together. 2 Peat-barrow. 3 Rock. 4 Sledge, car. [Cairns and barrows are very numerous in the Highlands, Ireland and Wales, as well as parts of Norway, Sweden, and other Continental countries, and there are a few in America. Some of them measure 300 ft. in circumference at the base and 20 ft. in height. They consist of loose stones, and the whole is in the shape of a cone. In many instances where they have been opened, they contained sepulchral urns, which show that they were memorials of the dead. Many of these piles consist entirely of earth, and this gave rise to the opinion that stone cairns were intended for malefactors, while those of earth were for the victorious and brave. We learn from ancient authors that malefactors were buried under heaps of stone, and it was a common practice among the Druids to erect cairns on spots where criminals had been burnt. Hence "fear air chàrn" means an outlaw, "tha e air a' chàrn," he is an outlaw. Is oil eam nach robh du luath fo chàrn, I do wish your ashes under a cairn; b' fhearr leam a bhi fo chàrn, I had rather be under a cairn, (i. e. be punished as an outlaw.) The ceremony in later times was continued in the Highlands, but its meaning was altered. A sudden death was bàs gun eapart, and the dead person's soul was believed to be in the hottest part of purgatory, so every passer by was expected to put a stone on the cairn and to pray for the repose of the soul of the departed—hence the saying "cuiridh mi clach 'nad chàrn," I will add a stone to your cairn, which betokens a friendly intention and means that one's remembrance shall be kept alive. When the remains of anyone were carried a long distance for interment, and the bearers had to take some rest on the way, a cairn was put up there also, and those who passed by were expected of their charity to put a stone on it, and pray for the soul of the deceased. Cairns are still frequently erected to mark the spot in which a funeral has rested, and on whatever spot a person is found dead, a few stones are immediately put together.—] cas-chrom, cois-chruin, s.f. The crooked spade, an implement of tillage peculiar to the Highlands, used for turning the ground where a plough cannot work on account of the stony ground. It is of great antiquity, and is described as follows by Armstrong. "It is very inexpedient in comparison with the plough, eight men being necessary to dig as much with it in one day as a horse would plough in the same time. It is chiefly used for tillage, and consists of a crooked piece of wood, the lower end somewhat thick, about two-and-a-half feet in length, pretty straight, and armed at the end with iron made thin and square to cut the earth. The upper end of this instrument is called the shaft, and the lower, the head. The shaft above the crook is pretty straight, being six feet long, and tapering upwards to the end which is slender. Just below the crook or angle, there must be a hole wherein a strong peg must be fixed, for the workman's right foot in order to push the instrument into the earth; while in the meantime, standing on his left foot, and holding the shaft firmly in both hands, when he has in this manner driven the head far enough into the earth, with one bend of his body he raises the clod by the iron-headed part of the instrument, making use of the heel or hind part of the head as a fulcrum. In so doing, he turns it over always towards the left hand and then proceeds to push for another clod in the same form. To see six or eight men all at work with this instrument, standing all on one leg and pushing with the other, would be a curious sight to a stranger. With all its disadvantages, the cas-chrom is, of all instruments, the fittest for turning up the ground in the country, for among so many rocks a plough can do little or nothing, and where there are no rocks, the earth is generally so marshy that cattle are not able to pass over it without sinking in deeply." It is of pretty general use in the Western Isles, one man being able to turn over more ground with it in a day than four are able to do with a common spade.

cha, negative particle, Not. [Cha aspirates the fut. neg. of a verb, also the initial of words beginning with labials and gutturals, and, in Argyllshire, with dentals also, as—cha dhuin an doras, the door will not shut; cha dhaoir a phris, its price is not high. Cha simply negatives the signification of the verb, as, (do) bhuail mi, I struck; cha do bhuail mi, I did not strike. It becomes cha'n before initial vowels or f pure, as cha'n òl mi, I shall not drink; cha'n fhosgail mi, I shall not open. Dr. Gillies remarks that the n of cha'n in cha'n 'eil, “shows the abiding influence of a lost dental n,—the n doubtless which re-asserts itself before initial vowels—it shows that it is wrong to separate the n of cha'n as is usually done in writing, as cha'n, cha-n and cha n.” [N is not a dental, and the n has as much right to separation as in gu'n dean. Cha'n is simply aspirated gu'n or co'n, only the aspirating influence is lost. It was no cha'n, and appears again in nach.] Cha'n 'eil eadar an t-amadan agus an duine glie ach tairgse mhath a ghabhail 'nuair a gheibh e i, there is no difference between the wise man and the fool, but to accept a good offer when in his power; cha mhaos mar an t-athair thu, you are not a son worthy of your father; cha téid e dhachaidh, he will not go home; cha tig fuachd gu h-earrach, cruaidh-chas no droch cheannach, cold, hardships, and bad bargains do not come till spring; cha'n fhadair an sáthach an seang, 's maing a bhitheadh 'na thráil do 'n bhoirinn, the satiated will not sympathize with the starving, woe to him who is a slave to his belly; cha'n fhiach duine gun sibht gun seoltachd, a man without shift and ingenuity is good for nothing; cha'n 'eil ann ach bó odhar mhaol, agus bó mhaol odhar, it is only a dun hornless cow, and a hornless dun cow—Gaelic equivalent of “six of one and half-a-dozen of the other”; cha mhór nach do mharbh e mi, he almost killed me; cha chuir mi, I will not put; cha dean mi, I shall not do; cha d'fhalbh mi, I did not go; cha d'éisid mi, I did not hearken; cha d'òl mi, I did not drink; cha leig mi, I shall not allow; cha d'rinn mi ach sgur, I have only just stopped; cha robh sgireachd anns a' Ghàidhealtachd cha mhór anns nach robh e, (col. cha mhór gu'n robh sgireachd &c., or 's gann a bha sgireachd &c.), there was hardly a parish in Gaeldom he had not been in; cha dean mi, I shall not do; cha'n fhaod thu, you must not; na'm bithion ag iarraidh cuideachaidh, cha lughaid gu'n rachainn do d' ionnsuidh air son 'fhaotainn, if I were wanting assistance, not the less would I go to you for it.

[The following remarks by J.G.M. concerning the form of the verb in -eas (e.g. cluinneas) should be borne in mind. “In the Gaelic sense it is not subjunctive. The proof is that cluinnear does duty for cluinn, cluinnidh and cluinneas in the so-called Passive. Thus ma, which in active takes -eas, in passive takes cluinnear; an and nach, which in active take cluinn, in passive take cluinnear, and the absolute cluinnidh is represented in passive by cluinnear. The so-called passive is really an impersonal form e.g. tilleair air 'ais, he returns home. How can an intransitive verb have a passive voice? for instance, come, one cannot say I was comed, yet in Gaelic we have, cha tigeir as eugmhais na pioban mòire, “cannot be comed without the pipes.” The Gaelic mind's conception of the subjunctive mood certainly does not cover the same ground as in English. Again, bhatar, people were (not people were'd or was'd) If cluinnear is passive, so is bhatar.”]

 a' ghnòthaich, in preparation for, in anticipation of the matter.

—Opening remarks—

a' dol an ceann ar turuis dhuinn,
 a' dol an tarruing oibre,
 a' teannadh gu feum,
 ciod a théid sinn 'na dhàil an toiseach?
 is e is toiseach-gnòthaich dhuinn....., the
 first business for us to transact is.....
 an ni is toiseach seanachais dhuinn, (an ni a tha an uachdar seanachais dhuinn), the chief matter or subject of our discussion., the burning question of the occasion.
 faigheamaid fios na firinn agus cur a' ghnòthaich, let us ascertain the truth and the state of affairs.
 bheireamaid ruith air gach chùis, (cuspair, obair, gnòthach, or aobhar ar saoid 's ar siubhail), let us treat of, consider everything, our affairs, &c.
 ceisd r'a rannsachadh, a question yet to be settled.
 [The following sentences bracketed together all mean "what we are engaged about," &c.]
 ann an los na coinnimh,
 'thad 's a tha sin 'nar taic ('nar cois, 'nar fochair.)
 ar ceann-steidh, fath ar turuis.
 an fhéill, (an ceaird) air am bheil sinn.
 aobhar ar saoid 's ar siubhail.
 ann an lorg an aobhair seo.
 am bonn (an car) a th' againn ri 'dheanamh tha ar lánhan 'san taoid.
 o'n a tha sinn ann an ionad breithneachaidh cò eile a bheir ruith air a chùis duinn?
 since we are in the full swing of debate, will some one else hold forth to us on the matter?
 tha mi 'cur air Mgr.... a nis mion agus garbh na 'cùise 'innseadh dhuinn, breithneach-adh còthromach—or rannsachadh—a thoirt air a' chuspair, a' chuspair a chur air a ballaibh dhuinn, I now call on Mr.... to give us a full summary of the matter.
 is math an airdh, agus fear-na-cathrach 'ga iarraidh orm, certainly, seeing that it is the chairman who wishes me to do so.
 bheir mi dhuibh dlùth-chuir air na cùisean seo, I will give you a close survey of these things.
 cha dean mi car rannsachaidh air, cha rach-ainn féin an seilbh na h-oibre, I will not go into the subject at all, I would not undertake such a thing.
 thar rian, wandering from the point, out of order.
 riaghailt, order.
 rian is riaghailt! order, order!
 cha'n 'eil thu an eiseimeil orduigh no rian,
 you have a lordly contempt for order, tha 'n gnòthach gu riaghailteach uile, the matter is entirely in order.

tha 'n gnothach a' dol mu seach oirnn (or cha bhuin sin do 'n chùis), the proceeding is out of order.

tha e 'dol 'sa mhùileann orm, ('dol mu seach orm, a' fàirtleachadh orm, 'gam sharachadh) it flabbergasts, puzzles, dumfounds, baffles me.

tha mi cur an teagamh riaghailt a' ghnòthach sin, I rise to a point of order.—i.e. I contest the orderliness of the present remarks.

cha chuir sin an aghaidh an riaghailt, ach fàgaidh e an riaghailt cho slàn 's a bha e, that is not against the rule at all, but it leaves the rule as unbroken as ever.

cha chuspair riaghailt sin idir, that is not a point of order.

tha mi 'toirt beum do 'n leasachadh sin, is e tha mi togail dhuibh gur briseadh air riaghailt an leasachadh, I wish to point out that the wording of the resolution is out of order.

tha sin as ar gabhail, cha'n 'eil sin 'nar taic, that is not the subject under discussion.

cha tìochd sin 'san iomairbhaidh, that is not within the area of the discussion.

ma chaidh mi càrr air mo rùn, cha b' ann do m' dheid, (eadar dhà naigheachd, chaidh guth thairis air a' chuspair againne), if I have strayed from my motion, it was not willingly, between two discussions our affair has quite been lost sight of.

chaidh sinn thar ar sìubhail, ar sgeoil, or ar gnothuich, we have wandered from our subject.

gabh mu chùl do chruidh agus ar cruidh fhéin, direct speech to the question.

cha bhi urram-gnothaich againn air a sin, we shall not deem that to be business; (leigeamaid troimh na meòir e, or gabhamaid ealla ris,) we shall ignore that.

[The terms in the next bracket are all requests for relevancy.]

cha'n e sin an fhìor-obair a th'againn an dràs.

tha cuid dheth sin nach 'eil a thaobh a' ghnòthaich againn.

tha sinn an grèim (an sàs) ann an ceisd eile an dràs.

ann am bun ceisd eile.

cha'n i sin a' cheisd a tha 'nar cois: na biodh ruith coin an dà fhéil againn.

gabh mu chùl do chruidh.

na bi againn bhos! is thall.

airgid thall, airgid a bhos! money there, money here!—money is not the question just now.

chuireadh sin cacoiladh cuir an clò Chalaim, that would confuse our aims and position.

chuireadh sin car 'san rùn againn, that would upset, or alter our proposition or resolution.

bheireadh sin ar n-anam-fas againn, that will prevent us developing, take away our raison-d'être.

na tog mi gus an tuit mi, do not interrupt unless I go wrong, out of order.

sin an nì is lugha th' air m' aire, b' fhada bhaidh sin a ghabhainn, that is far from my intention.

anns gach dàimh agus suidheachadh, in all circumstances and relations, on every occasion.

anas an riochd sin, in that connection, relation.

fuaighte, (an comb-cheangal) ris air dha ghleus, bound up with it in two ways.

tha 'n dara nì an eiseimil aon a chéile, the two things depend upon, arise out of each other.

tha leamhuinn a thaobh-eiginn eadar an dà cheisd, there is a certain amount of connection between the two things.

thoir an aon ruith da seo, deanamaid an dalta (tomhas) ceudna da seo, treat this in the same way.

cha'n 'eil sin ann an innleachd na coinnimh, that is not in the power of the meeting to settle.

air a shon sin dheth, as far as that goes, touches the matter.

air son na rinn sinne, as far as regards what we did in the matter.

tha sin agus a roghainn aig a' choinnimh, the meeting can do so if it please.

tha A.B. a' cur suas, agus C.D. e' cur taic ris gu'm...., it is moved by A.B., and seconded by C.D. that.....

tha mi 'tairgse, I propose.

tha mi 'cur suas gu'm..., I beg to move that..

tha mi 'cur suas an rùn seo, is e cead-rùn a tha mi 'g iarraidh ort, bu mhat leam rùn a chur 'nur cead, I beg to move the following resolution.

tha mi 'cur f' ur comhair, air bbur beulaobh, or mu bbur coinneamh, mar leasachadh, gu'm fàgar na facail a leanas a mach, I move as an amendment, that the following words be omitted.

tha mi 'cur f' ur comhair, air bbur beulaobh, or mu bbur coinneamh, an leasachadh a leanas a chur air an rùn, I move the following amendment to the motion.

tha mi 'cur suas leasachaidh mar a leanas, I move that the motion be amended as follows.

tha mi 'cuideachadh leis an leasachadh sin, I second that amendment.

cha bu ruith leam ach leum gu cuideachadh leis an leasachadh sin, (tha mise a' cuideachadh leis a sin le faillte—or agus beanachd 'na cheann), I have much pleasure in rising to support the amendment.

is tu fhéin a th' ann fhathast, is math a fhuaras tu, tha thu air chùl do sgeoil, buaidh leat; sgaille thu air! hear, hear!

a' cheisd roimhe, the previous question.

tagram (or iarram) gu'n rachadh a' cheisd a chur a nis, I beg to move that the question be now put.

cha leig sinn leò e, we will not allow them to carry it out.

cha'n fhaigh thu sin leat, you will not be able to carry that.

cha tog sin buannachd dhuinn, that will not benefit us.

leasachadh a dhiùltadh, to reject an amendment.

rùn a chuir an neo-bhrìgh, to rescind a resolution.

rùn a dhubhadh as, to expunge a resolution.

rùn a dhiùltadh, to negative a proposition.

dhiùltadh (s.), diùltach (a.), negative.

an aghaidh an aobhair, against the proposition.

gabhadh sinn an leasachadh de roghainn air an rùn, we accept the amendment in preference to the motion.

cha'n fhaod sinn a mhilladh, (a sbarachadh), we cannot do better than that.

iarram cead o 'n chathair an aobhar-rùn a tharruing air ais, a dheidh a' chinn-suidha cuiridh mi aobhar mo chuspair air chùl, I beg to withdraw the motion, with the consent of the chair.

tha nis agam m' ur coinneamh gu'n glac sibh mar rùn leis na leanas, I now propose to you that you adopt as a substantive resolution what follows

bha an tairgse air a chur an cruth rùn, the proposal was put in the form of a resolution.

cuireamaid an dara taobh e let us settle it,
dispose of it

b' e 'n turus gun bhuaidh dhuinn a' chòir a thoirt seachad air a cheisd seo, it were a great mistake on our part, not to deal justly and fairly with this question cuireamaid seachad seo let us dispose, or get rid of this

gheibhear deireadh gach sgeòil a nasgaidh, don't hurry, thrash the matter out at leisure.

pend standing orders.

In the above list the reader follows the course of an imaginary debate, and the sentences are divided into five sections for facility of reference, thus:—

(1) Names of processes and equivalents for amendments, &c. (2) Opening remarks, dealing in general with the subject of discussion, and calling upon people to speak.

(3) Matters of order and relevancy. (4) Amendments, and the putting and withdrawing of same, and requests for the thorough thrashing out of any matter. (5) Closure and summing up, voting, upshot, sending out notices, dissolving and proroguing. [This is the first such list published in Gaelic.]

NAMES OF EAR-MARKS ON SHEEP:—

- 1 Toll—hole made in the centre of ear.—hole.
- 2 Barr—top cut off the ear—tip, crop.
- 3 Ròibeadh—Slit made downwards from the top of ear—Lewis, —slit. Sgoltadh (AH)—Argyll—split.
- 4 Suileag—Top cut off in the form of a v with the apex downwards—"eal stob," fork; swallow-tail.—Lewis. Smeòrach (AH)—Argyll.
- 5 Geagan—triangular piece taken from top of the ear—cut.
- 6 Beum—semicircular piece taken from under-side of ear—hind-bit.—Lewis. Beum fo chluais (AH), beum cùlaoibh (DM) back-nip.
- 7 Gearradh, -ercean—Slit taken diagonally upwards at the side of the ear.
- 8 Gearradh—slit made at the side, across the ear.
- 9 Slisinn, cas,—slice taken from the side of the ear.
- 10 Amaladh—dovetail-shaped piece, taken from the side of the ear.
- 11 An t-snàthad—slit made in the centre of ear by bending or doubling the ear lengthwise and cutting down, leaving a tongue like that of a net-needle, from which it takes its name.
- 12 Bacan àrd, (AH) the fore, or upper half of barr cut off—fore-quarter—Argyll.—high-notch (DM.)
- 13 Bacan ìosal, (AH) hind, or lower half of barr cut off—hind-quarter—Argyll.—low-notch (DM.)
- 14 Beum os cionn na cluaise, (AH) Semi-circular piece taken from upper side of ear, like No. 6 on under side—fore-bit. Beum beulaioibh, (DM) fore-nip.
- 15 Cas-chaibe, piece taken from side of ear shaped like a cas-chom (DU)—Gairloch. In Argyll, this mark is taken from the top of the ear, so that when the mark barr is made, cas-chaibe disappears—(DM) spade-shaft.
- 16 Dà-sgoltadh, (DM) two parallel slits made downwards from top of ear—two splits—Argyll.
- 17 Dà-bheum, (DM) [like No. 6 duplicated]—two nips.
- 18 Beum mhéirleach, varies. If a sheep-stealer cuts off a cas-chaibe mark, the ear will then be like one marked barr. When lower marks than cas-chaibe have to be removed, a larger part of the ear is cut off, leaving only a stump.

In Lewis, the marks 1 to 9 are the old ear-marks, known as "na naoidh deargadh." Nos. 10 & 11 are of modern origin—(MMD) The "near" ear, is "cluas chli," or "cluas a' ghlaicaidh;" the "far" ear, "cluas dheas." By combinations of these marks, and the use of either or both ears, a practically endless variety may be obtained.

There are some who put age-marks on their sheep's ears,—one nip for one-year-old, two nips for two-year-old, and so on up to five-year-old, when the marking ceases—(DM.)

We are indebted to MMCD for names above, against which no references are given.

When a witch desired to destroy any one to whom she had an ill-will, she often made a corpse of clay resembling the unfortunate one, and placed it in some out-of-the-way burn under a precipice, in such a way that the water trickled slowly on it. As the clay body wasted so the live body of the person it resembled was also supposed to waste away. Were the body found, it was carefully preserved, and so the spell of the witch was broken. Sometimes pins were stuck in the clay body to make the death of the doomed one more painful. Several such bodies have been found, even of late years.

210. Crann-nan-gad.

211. Crann-nan-gad ('a' sealltainn stòr air.)

crann-nan-gad, s. m. Kind of plough, seldom used now, though at one time common enough, especially in the Western Isles. The parish of Barra is the only part of Lewis where it is still used. It is usually drawn by one horse, though two can be used. From its construction it is especially suited to the stony ground of the crofts, and its gradual disappearance is a cause of great regret, as there is no other implement, equally convenient to take its place. It possesses a great advantage over the common iron plough, in that, as the point runs along the ground behind the horse, it serves the two-fold purpose of keeping the plough steady, and when the share comes in contact with a stone, by lifting the handle, or lámh-chrann upwards like a lever, the share and sock can be lifted clear of the obstruction. The ploughman uses only one hand, and walks on the left side of the implement, instead of behind, as is now usual in ploughing.

PARTS OF CRANN-NAN-GAD:— (see illst. 210 & 211.)

- 1 Lámh-chrann, handle.
- 2 Más a'chroinn, rearpiece.
- 3 Sròn, point. It is shod with iron, and runs along the ground behind the horse.
- 4 Earrghas, body or mainpiece, between más and sròn.
- 5 Coltair, share (of iron.)
- 6 Soc, sock (of iron.)
- 7 Uirthilleach, the piece of hard wood with iron sheath on it, on which the mould-board rests, held in by "maide-a'-chroinn-sparraidh," by passing a thong through the mould-board and round the stick; the stick, or "maide-a'-chroinn-sparraidh," being inserted in the "lùbach" of the "uirthilleach" and pressed below "tarrag-a'-chroinn-sparraidh."
- 8 Bòrd-ùireach, mould-board.—Bòrd (CR.)
- 9 Maide-a'-chrann-sparraidh, the stick for holding mould-board in its place, by one end being fixed in a loop of iron in the "uirthilleach" called "lùbach na h-uirthilleach," the other end being pressed below "tarrag-a'-chroinn-sparraidh"—[sparr crauidh e, press it hard—hence the name.]
- 10 Tarrag-a'-chroinn-sparraidh.
- 11 Tarrag-mhaide-a'-chroinn-sparraidh, nail to which the bi-forked end of the stick is pressed under.
- 12 Na goid, bands of iron which bind the más and earrghas together. [These were originally of withes, hence their name.]
- 13 An druim mòr, long part of rope by which the plough is drawn.
- 14 An druim beag, short part of rope, which steadies the sròn.
- 15 Amall, main swingle-tree.
- 16 Na greallagan, swingle-trees next the horses to which the "sliosan" are attached by means of a "lùbach" and "cadhag" to each "slios."
- 17 Na cadhagan, iron links in the form of an S, between swingle-tree and plough, or between two swingle-trees. 2 Swingle-tree wedges.
- 18 Na lùbaichean, loops of iron, one on each end and one in the centre of each swingle-tree, in which the "cadhagan" are inserted.
- 19 Na shiosan, na sintean, drag-ropes or traces, on each side of horse, and attached to each end of swingle-trees.—Gearraisach (sing.).—CR.

The following parts are best explained by reference to illustrations 212 & 213.

- 19a Lùbach na h-uirthilleach, the part where the lower end of "maide-a'-chroinn-sparraidh" is inserted.
- 20 Meirgeal, the stick or iron which attaches the sock and "uirthilleach" to the "más," by one end being inserted in a hole through the lower end of the "más" and the other end into "ailean an t-suic" along with the "uirthilleach."
- 21 Ailean an t-suic, the space into which the "meirgeal" and "uirthilleach" are put in the sock. The illustration shows them inserted.
- 22 Òrdag an t-suic, toe of sock, which is inserted in a small hole in the point of the share.
- Iall, thong, which passes through a couple of small holes in the mould-board, and is tied to "maide-a'-chroinn-sparraidh" behind, in order to keep the mould-board steady.
- Na géinntean, wedges, which tighten the coltair, share and "meirgeal."
- Clasan, iron sole, fixed on the bottom of the "más" or rear-piece, to protect it from injury.

212. Crann-nan-gad bho 'n taobh-chiùil. | 213. A' sealltainn sìos air an t-soc.

Ill. 210 shows the space called "ailean an t-suic," in the under side of sock (shaded.) It is drawn looking from top or upper part of sock, so that the space may be seen plainly through it, though it would not be seen in actual fact as shown in this sketch.

A Coll priest of former times was accustomed to drive recalcitrant natives to church by a smart application of his walking stick, those who yielded were thus said to come under "creideamh-a' bhata-bhuidhe." Another version says Hector, son of Donald Maclean of Coll, was the one who applied the yellow stick. Hector was laird in 1715, and as the religion of the yellow stick was introduced into Rum in 1726, it is beyond dispute that Hector was the author, or propagator of it. He was dignified in appearance and stern in manners, and could no doubt wield the yellow stick gracefully and with efficiency.

dair (darach, oak) the fourth letter of the Gaelic alphabet now in use. The letters d and s at the commencement of a word often give it opposite meanings, as, daor, dear; saor, cheap.

D has various sounds: (1) Broad—more dental, e.g. more explosive than in English, and with the tip of the tongue right up to the teeth, as in dàn, a song; duine, a man; dlagh, a handful. (2) Small like g in genius, when flanked by a small vowel (e, or i), that is when small vowels are the nearest to it, as, faide, length; cèird, a trade. (3) D after ch sounds like k in English, thus lochd is pronounced lockk, the combination chd is thus the exact equivalent of final or medial c. (Boc, a buck, and bochd, poor, sound exactly the same.) (4) Dh, when broad, is very soft and resembles a soft English g. Thus, MacDhonnachaidh, a son of Duncan, usually Englished as Robertson, has also crept into English as MacConachy. MacDhaibhidh, a Davidson, has also been Englished as MacKay, so that some suppose that it was the MacKays who fought at the North Inch of Perth, whereas a little knowledge of Gaelic would have shown that it was the Davidsons.

As a final, broad dh usually gets its full value in pronunciation, thus, Odh has practically the force of O only, as in Loch Odha, the best English representation of which is Lochow. Odha, a grandson, is well known in Lowland Scots as oē. Bodhar, deaf; odhar, dun-coloured; modh, politeness; crodh, cattle; are practically pronounced bohr, ohr, mow and crow. In Skye, however, in some words, as, fodhol, fodha, the odh gets its full value.

Adh when medial, as in adharc, a horn; cladhach, digging; sounds as though the speaker checked or interrupted his breathing, besides which, the first a is sounded like ao. (5) Dh, when narrow, sounds like English y, as, dheth, off him; dhi, off her, (pron. yea, ye.) When final, as, in buailidh, shall strike; faidh, a prophet; aghaidh, face; it has the same y sound, except in Skye, Mull, and some other parts, where a final idh is pronounced almost as if written ich. Dh followed by l, or r, has no similar sound to them in English. The nearest approach to explaining it is to say that it is much softer than the softest English g, as in, a dhligh, his right; dhruidh, did penetrate, did impress.

In Old Gaelic the article sometimes ended in d. In Skye that d of the article has sometimes been retained before fh, as, an d'fhaidhe, of the prophet; and sometimes the d is absent, as, an fhair, of the man. This d appears with great irregularity in connection with feminine nouns, as, an d'-fhois, the rest, an d'-fhaire, the sea. Traces of d before initial vowels as in the old language, also occur, as, ceann an d'-aigh, the heifer's head; sgòthan air an d'-athar, clouds on the sky. Féile, kilt, in Skye has nom. sing. an t-éile, gen. & dat. an d'-heile. "Dobhran donn and sruth" is another example. We do not know the precise circumstances under which this d of the article appears.

The n of cha'n frequently becomes d before verbs beginning with t, especially irregular ones, thus, cha d'thoir, cha d'thig, cha d'teid, which are usually thus spelt, should be cha d'toir, cha d'tig, cha d'teid. This is called the eclipsis of t. D can also suffer eclipsis, as, a dh' aindeoin, in spite of, (pron. a ganyon.) Nan damh is pronounced nan amh in many parts of the North, is eudar dhomh, I must, is also sometimes contracted is eudar 'omh.

'd, (for iad) They, them. Ni'd gairdeachas, they shall rejoice.

'd, contr. (for ciod?) 'd é? (i.e. ciod e?) what? what is it?

d', contr. for do. 1 pron. Thy. [Used before words beginning with a vowel or f aspirated. Dr. Stewart does not approve of the custom, of writing t' where in other circumstances d' is used for thy, but t' is correct, both on account of pronunciation and derivation.] 2 prep. To. 3 Not the sign of the past tense of verbs, as mentioned in some dictionaries. It precedes verbs in the past tense. The real past tense sign is preserved in robh, spoken by some air an d'robh.

da, prep.pron. (for do e) To him, to it. Bu phaillinn dha, his pavilion was (lit. it was a pavilion to him.) Though generally written (da) without the accent to distinguish it from the numeral dà (two), it sometimes requires it in metre.

d' a, (for do a) To his or its. Chaidh e d' a chois, he went on foot; d'a shaoradh, to deliver him. [De, of his or its, is written de' when the possessive pron. is understood.]

d' a, (for do a) To her. D' a h-inghein, to her daughter. [De, of her, is written de' (h-) when the possessive pron. is understood.]

da, adv. II, whence.

da, a. Good (deagh).

dà, a. Two, In counting in Gaelic, for 1, 2, 3, &c., it is usual to say, a h-aon, a dhà, a trì, &c. [Dà aspirates a noun following, as, dà dhuine, two men; dà thaigh, two houses; dà shaighdear, two soldiers. Dà governs a noun following it in the dat. sing. and the adjective qualifying that noun in the n. sing. fem. The dative so-called is really the accusative of the old dual number in such an expression as, chunnaic mi dà chloich, I saw two stones, and dà properly speaking has no governing influence. The nom. dual fem. was like the dative singular, and the genitive dual was like the genitive singular. For all practical modern purposes, however, it will be easiest for beginners to follow the rule as usually expressed, and put a noun following dà in the dat. sing., and its qualifying adjective in the nom. sing. fem. Dà mhnai (better dithis bhan) two women; dà sheachdain, two weeks; dà chaol-chu, two gaunt hounds; cò an dà lunnadair mhór seo? who are these two great loons; dà fhear dheug is pìobaire, twelve men and a piper (here deug is an adj. to fear); an dà mhnai mhór, the two big women. This curious government gives way upon occasion, when other influences are too powerful, as, buinn mo dhà bhròige, the soles of my two shoes; ruith coin an dà fhéidh, the running of the dog of the two deer—said of people with divided aims; rudha nan dà ghleann deug, the promontory of the twelve glens; is e coslas dà bhean-usal a th' ann, it seems to be two ladies; is duine còir fear dà bhò, the man who has two cows is a decent man. When used absolutely, e.g. without a noun, dà becomes a dhà, as, tha a dhà agam, I have two; a nuas a dhà dhiubh, bring down two of them. When combining with deug, ten, and no noun being expressed, it is both aspirated and aspirating, as, aon bhò a bhriseas an garadh, agus a dhà dheug a leumas, one cow breaks the dyke, and a dozen leap it. When used to express multiplicity, a dhà nìread agus ..., twice as much as, is said; (here the a, and the aspirate in dà are the sign of the old possessive masculine or neuter, used proleptically. The literal meaning, therefore, is, its twice as much as.)

dà, prov. form of verbal particle do, used in Suth'd. "An t-àit an dà throg (thog) e," the place where he built.

d'a However. prov. "Is d'a ologu'm bi an grunn'd," and however bad be the soil.

dabhach, -aich, pl. dabhcha & -aichean, s.f. Vat, mashing vat. 2 Large tub. 3 District of a country, lot, portion of land or farm to carry 60 cows or head of cattle, dayoch. MacBain gives "either one or four ploughgates, according to locality and land." [A ploughgate contains 100 Scots acres.] Watson in The Place Names of Ross & Cromarty, says "usually four ploughgates." Skene in Celtic Scotland, says, "In the eastern district there is a uniform system of land denomination consisting of dabhachs, ploughgates and oxgangs, each dabhach consisting of four ploughgates, and each ploughgate containing eight oxgangs. As soon as we cross the great chain of mountains separating the eastern from the western waters, we find a different system equally uniform. The ploughgates and oxgangs disappear, and in their place we find dabhachs, and pennylands. The portion of land termed a dabhach, is here also called a tiring, or ounce-land, and each dabhach contains 20 pennylands." Prof. MacKinnon in Place and Personal Names of Argyll, says "In Pictland the unit of land measure was the dabhach, a word which properly denotes a liquid measure. An old farmer in Western Gaeldom frequently speaks of his fields, not as containing so many acres of land, but as 'the sowing of so many bolls of oats,' 'the bed of so many barrels of potatoes,' &c. Accordingly, from a measure of capacity, dabhach came early to be used as a measure of land surface. In Gaeldom, where the arable land is scant and scattered, the variations in the acreage of particular dabhachs or ounces must have been very great, still the extent of land represented by these terms seems to have been, as a rule, about 104 Scots acres, or 120 English acres."

d' Huge woman. A legend says that "an Dabhach" was the name of Ossian's wife. She was big, burly, and fat (mór, mäsach, agus mèith.) When he was old and blind they fell out, he threw a deer's shin-bone at her and missed her, hence the saying, urchar an doill mu 'n dabhach, a throw or blow at a venture; d. fionna, a wine-press.

 dath, v.a. Colour, dye, tinge stain.
 —, -a, -an [& -aithean,] s.m. Colour, stain, dye, tincture. 2 Colouring, appearance. Cha luidh d. air dubh, luidh dh dubh air gach d., black materials will not dye a colour, but any colour will take black; do ghruaidh air d. na cèire, thy cheeks coloured like red wax; d. a bréige, a false dye; dathan eug-samhuil, various colours.
 The following are the principal native vegetable dyes used in Gaeldom, with the colours they produce. Several of the tints are very bright and pretty, but have now, unfortunately,
 in many cases been superseded by foreign mineral dyes.
 Claret—corcur—a lichen scraped from the rocks and steeped in urine three months, then taken out, made into cakes and hung in bags to dry. When used, these cakes are reduced to powder and the colour fixed with alum.
 Black (finest)—Common dock root with copperas. 2 Darach, oak bark and acorns, with copperas. 3 (or grey) Seilistear, iris root. 4 Sgitheach, hawthorn bark with copperas. 5 Alder bark with copperas. 6 (bluish) Common sloe—prunus spinosa, preas-nan-àir-neag. 2 (bluish) Red bearberry—arbutus uva ursi, grannseag.
 Blue—blaeberry, with alum or copperas. 2
 Elder, with alum. 3 Ailleann, elecampane.
 Brown—Common yellow wall-lichen—par- melia parietina. 2 Dark cnotal—parmelia cetarophylla. 3 Duileasg, dulse—kind of seaweed. 4 Currant with alum. 5 Daragh (oak) bark, or berries of craobh-an-dromaìn, elder. 6 (Dark chestnut) Roots of rabhagach, white water-lily. 7 (Dark) Blueberry with nut-galls, 8 (Reddish) The dark purple lichen, 'cen cerig oen du'—(gun chéire gun dubh—neither crimson nor black) treated in the same manner as the lichen for claret dye. 9 (Philamot)—yellowish (dead leaf coloured) cnotal—parmelia saxatilis.

Drab or Fawn.—Birch bark, betula alba. Green.—Ripe privet berries with salt. 2 Wild mignonette, reseda luteola, lus buidhe mór, with indigo. 3 Rásg coanuis, whin bark. 4 Cow-weed. 5 (Lively) Common broom. 6 (Dark) Heather, erica cinerea, fraoch bhadaín, with alum. The heather must be pulled before flowering, and from a dark shady place. 7 Iris leaf, duilleag seilisteir.

Magenta.—Pandelion—contodon taraxacum, bearnan Bride.

Orange.—Ragweed (stinking Willie)—senecio Jacobaea, buaghallan. 2 Barberry root—berberis vulgaris, barbrag 3 (dark)—Bramble—rubus fruticosus, preas meur.

Purple.—Euonymous (spindle-tree,) with sal-ammoniac. 2 Sundew—drosera rotundifolia, lus-na-fearnaich. 3 Blueberry—vaccinium myrtillus, with alum.

Red.—Tormentil—potentilla tormentilla, lean-artach. 2 Rock-lichen—ramalina scopulorum, cnotal. 3 White cnotal—lecanora pallescens, cnotal geal. 4 (fine)—Rue—gallium virum, ladies' bedstraw. A very fine red is obtained from this. Strip the bark off the roots, then boil them in water to extract the remainder of the virtue, then take the roots out and put the bark in and boil that and the yarn together, adding alum to fix the colour. Gallium boreale treated in the same way also produces a red dye. 5 (purple)—Blueberry, vaccinium myrtillus, lus-na-deara, with alum, verdigris and sal-ammoniac. 6 (crimson)—cnotal corcur—lecanora tartarea, white and ground and mixed with urine. This was once in great favour for producing a bright crimson dye. 7 (scarlet)—limestone lichen—urceolaria calcarea, cnotal clach-aoil. Used by the peasantry in limestone districts, as Shetland. 8 (scarlet) Ripe privet berries with salt.

Violet.—Wild cress—nasturtium officinalis—biolair. 2 Bitter vetch—orobus tuberosus—cairmeal. 3 Bilberries fixed with alum.

Yellow.—Apple-tree, ash and buckthorn. 2 Poplar and elm. 3 Roid, bog-myrtle. 4 Ash roots. 5 Teazle—dipsacus sylvestris—lus-an-fhucadair or leadan. 6 Raineach mór, bracken roots. 7 Cow-weed. 8 Tops and flowers of fraoch, heather. 9 Wild mignonette—reseda luteola, dried, reduced to powder and boiled. 10 Leaves and twigs of beithe beag, dwarf birch 11 (bright) Sundew with ammonia—drosera rotundifolia—lus-na-fearnaich. 12 (rich) Achlasan Chalum Chile, St. John's wort, fixed with alum. 13 (dirty) Peat soot. 14 Rhubarb, (monk's)—rymex alpinus—lus-na-purgaid.

The process employed is to wash the thread thoroughly in urine long kept (fual), rinse and wash in pure water, then put into the boiling pot of dye which is kept boiling hard on the fire. The thread is lifted now and again on the end of a stick, and again plunged in until it is all thoroughly dyed. If blue, the thread is then washed in salt water, but any other colour in fresh.

de, prep. Of, off. According to MacBain, the peculiar custom of confusing this word with do, to, in speaking Gaelic, extends back to Old Irish in pre-accentual de compounds, but the erroneous practice has no doubt largely been increased by the publishers of the Gaelic Scriptures, the instances of the use of do, instead of de making the meaning of the text in Gaelic just the opposite of what the original conveys. It is strange how tenacious some Gaelic writers are of the pernicious custom of using do for both de and do, while it is quite plain that the meaning of one is just the opposite of the other. It is no excuse to say that it is often spoken so (in some places de is practically obsolete) for it is the duty of scholars and those who write or speak Gaelic, to do so correctly, and so help to correct popular errors instead of perpetuating them. This is only one case among many, where any unprejudiced person can see the absolute necessity of Gaelic being taught in every school, at least in Gaelic-speaking districts, to prevent its becoming a mixture of exceptions like English.

An gabh thu roinn d'èith sin ? will you take a part of that ? beir mi 'a ghlas de 'n doras, I will take the lock off the door ; thug mi 'n ceann de m' òrdaig, I took the tip off my thumb. If do be substituted for de in each of above examples, the result is mere nonsense.

De mar a bha mo dhalta de 'n chomhraig ?
how did my foster-son come off in the battle ?
[De becomes dh' before a vowel, and a dh' if also following a consonant, it aspirates everything following it, and governs the Dative case.]

Armait mhór de dhaoibh agus a dh' each-aibh, a great army of men and horses ; lán de reubainn agus a dh' aingidheachd, full of ravening and wickedness.

De is thus declined in conjunction with the personal pronouns :

Sing. diom, of me, Plur. dinn, of us,
diot, of thee, dibh, of you,
deth, of him, diubh, of them,
dith, of her, m. & f.

The initial d is generally aspirated (dhiom, dhiot, &c.) in composition.

de', prep. Of or off his or its. [Used before a word beginning with a vowel, or when poss.
pron. is understood.]

dé' h', prep. Of or off her, (poss. pron.) [Used before a word beginning with a vowel, or when poss. pron. is understood.]

263. Dealbh (13) Dealbh-árd.

263a. Suidheachadh na creiseim.

The warping-frame shown in illust. is known in Uist as "deilbh árd," and the term deilbh (dealbh) is seldom used in this connection alone. It is called deilbh árd because the old original, and still usual manner, of warping the thread is by fixing the fuaintean in the clay floor. Consequently, when a frame was constructed and raised up against the wall, it received the name of "deilbh árd."

PARTS OF A WARPING-FRAME:—

- 1 Crann-deilbhe, crann-dealbha, or beart-dheilbh, frame. [bar.]
- 2 Spàrr-mullaich, sail-mhullaich, upper cross-bar.
- 3 Spàrr buinn, sail-bhuinn, lower cross-bar.

- 6 Bocsas na deilbhe, bocsa na céirsle, box for holding the clew.
- 7 Croisean, threads on frame. Croiseadh an t-snátha, is the name of the operation shown here. Double threads are used, and when finished, half the threads are on each side of the creiseim-stick.
- 8 Dealbhach, thread on frame.
- 9 Creiseim. These two pegs on upper cross-bar, as in second illust., and two similar ones on lower cross-bar, explain the old form of dealbh formerly in use in Lewis, but the form shown in first illust., is that generally used elsewhere. For modern form as used in Lewis see appendix. The form of winding thread on two top and bottom pegs in lower ill. is called creiseim in Lewis.

"INFIN." a dheanamh, to do. [properly it's doing. There is no Infinitive in Gaelic, but unfortunately the Gaelic Verbal Noun frequently appears in places where in English infinitives would be used. A true infinitive cannot govern the genitive case. A participle is a noun, and therefore governs the genitive case, an infinitive is a verb, and therefore cannot govern a noun in the genitive. When one sees a thing called "an infinitive" governing something in the genitive, it may be concluded that it is a noun, not a verb, and, consequently, not an infinitive. Bonnach a mhealladh na cloinne, is a bannock for de- ceiving (of NOT to deceive) the children; bu mhath leis an rìgh Pàdruig a theacht, is translated, the king wished Pat to come, whereas what is meant is, the king wished Pat to coming. That teachd=coming and not come.
This appears from the following, which occurs in MacTalla. "Bu mhath leam iad a dh' fhàgail nan each," I wish them to leave (to leaving) of the horses. Now, nan each is incontestably a genitive case, therefore it must have been governed by a noun, not by a verb.
The Latin amare was an infinitive, so it could not govern a genitive, but amatum was a noun and declinable like a noun. So was the old Celtic gerund, or verbal noun, equally declinable, and many of them showed a dative case after the preposition do. Cuir in the dative, is, to this day, cur, which is its dative. But further, what about "bu mhath leam iad dha m' fhàgail," (some write "ga m' fhàg-ail")? If fhàgail equals in this case an infinitive,
i. e. if it is to be translated to come, we shall have my to come. In other words, because fhàgail is qualified by a possessive pronoun, or by a possessive adjective, we see that it is a noun, not a verb. My coming, my leaving, are possible, my to come, my to leave, are inconceivable. As every one of the so called infinitives can (1) take a possessive adjective, and can (2) govern a noun in the genitive, the conclusion is that these "infinitives" are all nouns and not verbs.]

PRES. PART., a' deanamh, doing.

Passive Voice— [properly a GRAPHIC or HISTORIC voice, not "PASSIVE." No in-transitive verb can have a passive voice, but all intransitive verbs in Gaelic have an impersonal or graphic form. Chualas a bhi 'fos-gladh an doruis, I heard (people) opening the door; dh'iarr a' mhuir a bhi 'ga taghal, the sea wished people to resort to her. Here "a bhi aig" seems to include a subject (people.)
However, this is not relevant, see MacTalla, vi. p. 50 "Deanar caol-dreach air an aite," (they) made straight for the place. "Deanar" is an intransitive verb, like "go." Translate it for a moment as "go." If it be passive, then the sentence means (they) are go-ed (or went-ed) straight &c. Again, cha tìgear as eugmhais na pioba, (people) cannot get on with- out the bagpipe—"tiger" is passive, then the sentence means without the bagpipe it will not be comed. Tachrar maighdean Eilean-an-èisg orra, thuit i an trom ghaol air D., the maiden of Eilean-an-dig meets them, she falls in heavy love on D; NOT the maiden will be met on them, NOT she will be fallen in heavy love on D.]

Am feadh 'sa bhitheas a' ghrian a' dol d., while the sun goes southwards; d. air gach nì, the sunward course with everything—south course, right direction; cuimhnich am beagan a bha eadarainn, gu'm beil e d. dhomhs' agad, remember that there is a little outstanding between us, you ought to have it ready for me. Prosperous course, turning from east to west in the direction taken by the sun. D. air gach nì, the sunward course (is the best) for everything. This is descriptive of the ceremony observed by the Druids, of walking round their temples, by the south, in the course of their divinations, keeping the temple always on their right. This course was deemed prosperous, the contrary (tuathal) fatal, or at least, unpropitious. From this ancient superstition are derived several customs which are still retained amongst us, as drinking over the left thumb, as Toland expresses it, or according to the course of the sun. Martin says, "some of the poorer sort of people in the Western Isles retain the custom of performing these circles sunwise about the persons of their benefactors three times, when they bless them, and wish good success to all their enterprises. Some are very careful, when they set out to sea, that the boat be first rowed sunwise, and if this be neglected, they are afraid their voyage may prove unfortunate. I had this ceremony paid me when in Islay by a poor woman, after I had given her an alms. I desired her to let alone that compliment, for that I did not care for it; but she insisted to make these three ordinary turns, and then prayed that God and MacCharnaig, the patron saint of that island, might bless and prosper me in all my affairs. When a Gael goes to drink out of a consecrated fountain, he approaches it by going round the place from east to west, and at funerals, the procession observes the same direction in drawing near the grave. Hence also is derived the old custom of describing sunwise a circle, with a burning brand, about houses, cattle, corn and corn-fields, to prevent their being burnt, or in any way injured by evil spirits, or by witchcraft. This fiery circle was also made around women, as soon as possible after parturition, and also around newly-born babes. These circles were, in later times, described by midwives, and were deemed effectual against the intrusion of the daoine sìth or stichian, who were particularly on the alert in times of childbed, and not infrequently carried infants away, according to vulgar legends, and restored them afterwards, but sadly altered in features and in personal appearance. Infants stolen by fairies are said to have voracious appetites, constantly craving for food. In this case it was usual for those who believed that their children had been taken away, to dig a grave in the fields on quarter-day and there to lay the fairy skeleton till next morning, at which time the parents went to the place, where they doubted not to find their own child in place of the skeleton."

 Though Friday has always been held an unlucky day in various Christian countries, and even among such people as the Brahmins, still in the Hebrides it is supposed to be the lucky day for sowing the seed in the ground. Good Friday in particular is a favourite day for potato planting—even strict Catholics make a point of planting a bucketful on that day. Probably the idea is, that as the Resurrection followed the Crucifixion and Burial, so too in the case of the seed, that after death will come life.

 do, prep. To (i.e. unto.) [Aspirates word following, and governs the Dative case. It is often dh', or redundantly do dh', or a dh', before a word commencing with a vowel. In other cases it is often a, or is omitted entirely. Chaidh e dh' Eirinn, [or do dh' Eirinn, or a dh' Eirinn,] he went to Ireland; chaidh iad a Phort-rìgh, or chaidh iad Phort-rìgh, they went to Portree.
 Do is joined with the personal pronouns thus:—domh, to me; duit, to thee; da, to him; di, to her; duinn, to us; duibh, to you; doibh, to them. These prepositional pronouns are generally aspirated.
 Do is a remarkable preposition too subtle to analyze, but the examples given below give a fair idea of its different meaning in various contexts. Do 'n duine, to the man; do d' mhàthair, to thy mother; do mo réir-sa, according to my views; gur pailt liagh do na ràman na lunn, the blades of the oars are too big for the oars; a dh' oic no a dh' eiginn [or a chòir no a dh' eugoir, or a dheid no a dh' aindeoin,] somehow or other, by hook or by crook, willy nilly. As a prepositional pronoun:—Is aithne dhomh sin, I know that; is math dhomh sin, that is well (good) for me; is léir dhomh, I can see; leig dhomh, permit me; dé 'dh' éirich dhuit? what has befallen thee? nach ann domh a dh' éirich! to me what evil has befallen! cha'n 'eil dhomh ach—, all that is necessary for me is—; leig dhomh, let me alone, (also leig leam); roimh tighinn dhuinn, before we came; mhothaich e da ged a bha e uaigheach, he perceived (to) it though it was in secret; is dona an ceann sin dhuit, that is against your health; an urrainn duit ceann a thoir dhaibh? are you able to vanquish them? (lit. a head to give them), [also are you able to face them?]; oidheche dhomh 'sa bheinn-sheilg, I being one night in the hunting mountain; ri teachd dhomh, just as I was arriving; an deidh dhomh falbh, after I had gone; an am dhomh dol sìos, when I go down (to battle); an dèsgadh no an eadail duinn, both when we are asleep and awake; a' falbh a' Loch-nam-madadh dhùinn, when we, going from Loch Maddy; cia as duit? whence have you come? also where was your birth-place? bhiodh an àireamh diom-buan doibh, their number would soon be reduced for them; is dithis duinn sin, mu 'n dubhairt an fheannaig mu a casan, they're a pair, as the crow said of her legs; bu Ìon-mhoire dhuit 'shraacadh ann, na cunntas shlat an cliabh, you could find more rents in it than withies in a basket; gur e dhùisg mo shana-chas domh..., what caused my muse to awake is...; 'nuair dhùisgear ascaoin duit, when your anger be awakened; theiirg gual domh, my coal has given out; cha'n e am bord a theiirg dhuit, ach am beagan fearainn, it is not the plough that failed you, but that there was not enough land; a réir fios domh, as far as I know; ma 's fìor daibh féin, if they may be believed; fhuair mi fios bho phiuthar dhomh, I got word from a sister of mine; chuaila mi an t-òran sin aig caraaid domh, I heard that song being sung by a friend of mine; ma 's e bas dhomh gu ma b-e dhuit e! if it be a case of death for me may it be so to you! is pailte brù na biadh dha,—said to a glutton; mar a chith-ear dha, as circumstances may warrant.

For note on the pernicious practice of confounding do and de, see under de.

do, poss. pron. Thy, thine. [Aspirates its noun, and there is a pernicious practice of dropping the o after prepositions ending in vowel, even before consonant initials, as do d' mhac, to thy son, which must be guarded against.] Do lamh, thy hand; do fhreagairt, thine answer. [T before a vowel, t' a-thair, thy father.] do, particle, placed before verbs, but not the sign of the past tense, as is often stated. An do fhreagair e? did he answer?

do, worn down in most districts to dh' or a', is still retained in Suth'd before the infinitive, and in certain phrases. Nach 'eil thu dol do shuidhe? are you not going to sit?; tha e dol do shealltainn ort, he is going to see you; do dh' fheuchainn (for a dh') ; dol do ghabhail, going to take.

do, substitute for a dh' in Suth'd. Cha toir a' bhò am bainne d' easbhuidh fiach, the cow will not give her milk without its equivalent.

do-, negative initial particle of the same import as Latin and English in-, or English un-, implying sometimes difficulty, sometimes impossibility. [Aspirates consonants following.] Compounds of do not found below, can be translated by finding the meaning of the second portion, and placing in- or un- before it.

and it is only when Christianity had been long established and druidism had become a thing of the remote past, that we have writers who speak of the druids, and then only refer to them as magicians and diviners, sometimes only as conjurers; there is no hint of either philosophy or religion in Druidism. They surrounded kings and chiefs. The power of the Tuatha Dé Danann, the pre-eminent masters of druidic art, over the forces of nature shows them to have been degraded gods. The Druids opposed Columba and Patrick with darkness. A blow from their wand caused transformation and spells. Their sacred wood was not the oak, as in Gaul, but yew, hawthorn and especially the rowan. Divination by watching smoke and flame, chewing raw flesh (cf. Fionn's thumb), &c., was one of their chief occupations. Bards were sometimes diviners, thus apparently showing an ancient connection with the Druids. Sometimes we have an echo of the time when Druidism was something more than mere wizardry, and even when human sacrifices were offered (for example, the Columba and Odhran story.) Prof Rhys sums up:—At the time of Cæsar, the Druids were a powerful class—soothsayers, magicians and priests. In Gaul, under the influence of Mediterranean civilization, they were also philosophers, and discoursed on the stars, the world, the nature of things and the power of the gods. Rhys thinks Druidism non-Aryan, MacBain does not.

The following remarks by foreign writers were made while druidism was still practised and full particulars easily obtainable. The accuracy of Latin writers on the military and domestic arrangements of the Celts is well known, so their remarks about the druids are probably quite as reliable.

Diodorus Siculus calls attention to the druidic doctrine that the souls of men were immortal, and that after the lapse of an appointed number of years they came to life again, the soul then entering another body.

Julius Cæsar says the Druids were occupied with religious matters, conducted public and private sacrifices, and interpreted omens. They were the teachers of the country, and judges in public and private disputes, awarding damages and penalties. Any contumacy in reference to their judgments was punished by exclusion from the sacrifices—the severest punishment among Gauls. Men so punished were treated as outlaws. There was one supreme head over the Druids, who, on his death was succeeded by the nearest in dignity, or if several were equal, the successor was chosen by the vote of the Druids. Sometimes the primacy was not decided without arbitration of arms. Cæsar mentions the belief that their doctrines originated in Britain, and were carried from thence into Gaul. The Druids were immune from military service and payment of tribute. They were said during their training, which sometimes lasted twenty years, to learn by heart a large number of verses. They held it wrong to put their religious teaching in writing. Their cardinal doctrine was the transmigration of souls, and this was a supreme incentive to valour, by making the fear of death count for nothing. They discussed the stars and their motions, the size of the universe and the earth, the nature and the might and power of the immortal gods. They presided at the human sacrifices, which might be public or private.

Cicero says the Druids possessed knowledge of natural science, and foretold the future.

Origen says they practised sorcery.

Strabo refers to them as judges, philosophers and divines, says they were held in exceptional honour, and mentions their belief in immortality. No sacrifice could be made without the presence of a Druid. They were in great request in time of war, being consulted alike by the enemy and those of their own side. Even when two armies were on the point of going to battle, Druids have been able to stop them.

Lucan refers to the seclusion of the Druids' groves and their belief in immortality.

Pliny refers to their veneration of the mistletoe, and the tree on which it grew (if an oak), hence their predilection for oak-groves, and the requirement of oak-leaves for all religious rites. He mentions a serpent-egg, produced from the frothy sweat of snakes writhing together in a ball.

Ammianus Marcellinus says they were closely linked together into confraternities, and declared the soul immortal.

Cæsar includes under the term druid all non-military professional classes—whether priests, seers, teachers, lawyers or judges. To others, druids are philosophers and teachers, and distinguished from seers. To others again, such as Pliny, they were the priests of the oak-ritual, whence their name was derived.—Extracts from art. by Dr. MacBain in Celtic Mag. 1883-4, and Celtic Religion by Prof. Argyll.
